Mexican Aid For Defense Is Promised By Camacho

At Inauguration, President Pledges Nation Will Respect U. S. Investments

By Jack O'Brine

Mexico City, Dec. 1.—Gen. Manuel Avila Camacho, became Mexico's eighty-seventh President today, succeeding Lazaro Cardenas, and in the first hour of his rule demonstrated that his government stood shoulder to shoulder with American republics in the defense of democracy and the security of this hemisphere.

The 43-year-old former war minister for whose personal safety more than 30,000 alert guards patrolled this capital, was inaugurated peacefully soon after 11 a. m. in the presence of special envoys from 31 foreign nations, at a brief ceremony in the chamber of deputies.

Any doubt that might have remained in the minds of his audience as to Mexico's foreign policy was cleared away with one stroke when he announced the ministers of his cabinet 30 minutes after his inauguration.

Without a single exception, the ministers were identified as stout friends of the United States and formidable enemies of totalitarian procedures.

Wallace Applauded

Avila Camacho placed at the head of his foreign office Ezequiel Padilla, lawyer and diplomat, who has a degree from Columbia University, and who is known to be a warm friend of the United States and Great Britain. Padilla pledged himself to close cooperation with the United States.

Ranking spectator at the inaugural ceremonies in the Chamber of Deputies, Henry A. Wallace, Vice President-elect of the United States, was given a standing ovation when he entered at the head of 25 American delegates, including Ambassador Josephus Daniels.

In his inaugural address, Avila Camacho described it as a "great good fortune" that the American republics were united "in the common thought of defense against any aggression to our continental doctrine of equality, respect of our rights and reciprocity."

The new President said "this doctrine of peaceful and just relations" constituted the only hope for the salvation of "the civilized international rights, which we need so much in these trying times of blood and horror." He said that nothing divided America, or its resolution to stand for "peaceful cooperation over mechanized destruction."

Appeals for Unity.

Disclosing his decision to join immediately efforts of the United States to tighten continental defense, Avila Camacho predicted that, once the entire continent had "covered every weak spot," it would be rendered invincible. He said that it was not important whether the nations of this hemisphere were large or small, because they were united in a common cause.

Earlier in his address, Avila Camacho appealed for national unity to support his program in which he stressed his desire for fairness to capital and labor and promised full protection for foreign investors. It was regarded generally as the words of a man far more conservative than President Cardenas.

Although holding out no hope that expropriated lands would be returned immediately to their former owners, Avila Camacho made it clear that private properties would be respected by his government, and

2 Homes Face Dreary Yuletide Due to Unemployment, Illness

Head of One Loses Leg While Seeking Job; Fuel, Food and Clothing Needed by Both; $220 Would Solve Immediate Problems

By Lucia Giddens
Post Staff Writer

When a young couple has three small children, it is harder to endure being one of the neediest families in Washington, especially at Christmas. That is the plight of the M. family.

Mr. M.'s loss of his job, a traffic accident, amputation of his leg, exhaustion of the family's funds, children thinly clad and needing more nourishing food—all these problems have added up to bring dispair into the home.

To help this family and others in urgent emergencies, The Post gives readers an opportunity to contribute to the Christmas Fund. This expression of Christmas spirit will help to lift the load from the 50 neediest families in Washington—the load which they are unable to bear alone. Readers are urged to send their contributions as soon as possible to The Post so Christmas cheer can be guaranteed for these homes which would otherwise be cheerless.

Family No. 1

Months ago Mr. M. lost his job and began the weary search for a new one. Then, one day, a friend told him about an employer who was hiring men as laborers on a construction job. In his haste to reach the place, he ran across the street in the path of an automobile and was struck down. The driver was not insured and was unable to pay the hospital expenses of Mr. M., whose leg was amputated to the knee. During his long convalescence, Mr. M. made a friend who helped the family as long as he could, but now his efforts have been exhausted.

Finally Mr. M. was forced to go to a family agency for help. The case worker who visited the family found Mrs. M. and the three children in small, crowded, poorly-ventilated quarters, to which they were forced to move when Mr. M. became unemployed. The house has no heat except what comes from a small cook stove. The children do not have enough clothing to keep them warm.

But the family can not call even this bleak place "home" much longer. The house is to be condemned,

Adm. Stark Urges More Naval Bases

'Force Now Only Safe Insurance of National Survival,' He Says in Report

Americans "must be prepared to rely only on ourselves," Admiral Harold R. Stark, Chief of Naval Operations, declared last night in calling for advanced naval bases "in our own overseas possessions wherever they are needed, be it in Puerto Rico, Hawaii or Guam."

Publishing his annual report, Admiral Stark warned the Nation that "force is now the only safe insurance of national survival," and reminded it that "unpreparedness has suddenly cost the independence of 13 nations abroad."

The report was made public as President Roosevelt prepared to depart, probably today, on what was understood to be a cruise to the Caribbean, where he will inspect new naval and air bases being established by this country on British islands, and perhaps watch Navy and Marine practice operations.

To Check Patent Applications

The national defense effort likewise brought arrangement of a three-day conference, beginning today, at which high-ranking technicians of the Army and Navy and the 15-man Inventors Council will give attention to some 6,000 proposed patents in a search for new "secret weapons."

In addition, the Defense Communications Board, created to coordinate the communications industry's role in the defense program, invited executives of seven major communications companies to act as an advisory committee. It likewise invited the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the National Federation of Telephone Workers to recommend members for a labor advisory committee.

Admiral Stark's report said that "the experiment of disarmament" from 1921 to 1935 "cost us dearly in relative naval strength—but the greatest loss is time."

Warning On Fleets

Warning against erroneous interpretation of the "two-ocean Navy" expression, the admiral said "our aim must be to have sufficient forces to assure the Navy complete freedom of action in either or both oceans. Less than this naval strength under present world conditions would be hazardous to the security of our Nation."

Regarding the patents study by defense officials, Patent Commissioner Conway Coe was quoted by International News Service as saying that out of this and subsequent conferences may emerge a powerful new weapon to aid in giving the United States superiority over potential enemies and possibly "turn the tide of battle" in this or future wars.

Nazis Back Claims on Hungary, Antonescu Tells Iron Guards; Greeks Begin Push Toward Sea

Complete Occupation Of Pogradetz, Press On Despite Weather; Elite Italians Flee

By C. L. Sulzberger

Athens, Dec. 1.—After completing the occupation of Pogradetz and cleaning up the last Italian defensive positions on the heights north and northwest of the town, the Greek army today began pushing its advance toward the sea. (Passage censored.)

Tonight's communique is sparce in its details. It states merely that "important advances on the entire front occurred and that points of special importance for the development of operations in the region of Premet were occupied. One hundred and fifty prisoners were taken, in addition to considerable material."

Premet is on the central front, about midway between Argirocastro and Koritza, Albania, and about 25 miles north of Konitza, Greece.

Greeks Chase Italians

Tonight the official spokesman announced, "Along the entire front from the sea to Lake Ochrida the Italian army is retreating. Our troops are pursuing them with tenacity. Despite enemy efforts to utilize to their advantage rough terrain, especially the mountains and narrow gorges and the presently bad atmospheric conditions, our troops have managed to continue their attack and have taken fortified heights with the bayonet, despite strong resistance.

"In the south the Italians have reinforced their army but despite this they have been obliged to retreat, leaving behind them cannon, machine guns and more than 200 prisoners, including officers. All the way up to the sea there is good news and the Italian resistance is breaking, forcing the abandonment of strategic positions.

"The enemy air activity has been increasing but our troops still advance. Now the weather is interfering with this arm and snow has begun to fall along the front.

"Even the dispatch of elite fresh troops to the enemy front lines has not been able to reorganize the retreating Italian armies and the Italian casualties are quite heavy, especially in the central sector south of Koritza."

'The Greatest Cause'

Ambassador Kennedy Resigns To Fight War Threat to U. S.

Won't Return to London But Keeps Title Until Successor Is Named

Joseph P. Kennedy, United States Ambassador to Great Britain, revealed last night he had tendered his resignation to President Roosevelt November 6.

He has agreed, however, to retain his position, at least technically, until a successor is appointed, although he will not return to London.

Kennedy disclosed his resignation after flying here from New York and making a surprise visit to the White House. He conferred for some time with Mr. Roosevelt, later issuing the following statement:

"On November 6 I tendered to the President my resignation as his Ambassador to the Court of St. James's.

"Today the President was good enough to express regret over my decision, but to say that, not yet being prepared to appoint my successor, he wishes me to retain my designation as Ambassador until he is. But I shall not return to London in that capacity.

"My plan is, after a short holiday, to devote my efforts to what seems to me the greatest cause in the world today, and means, if successful, the preservation of the American form of democracy.

"That cause is to help the President keep the United States out of war."

Fascists Flee

By the Associated Press

Bucharest, Dec. 1.—A hundred thousand cheering Iron Guardsmen pledged themselves tonight to fight for reunion of Hungarian-occupied Transylvania with Rumania after Premier Gen. Ion Antonescu had assured that Germany and Italy showed "understanding" for Rumania's desire.

"I went to Berlin and Rome for Transylvanians," Antonescu, who recently has returned from those Axis capitals, told the greenshirted guardsmen.

He said Hitler's message for the Rumanian army was that "on your shoulders rests the duty to repair and correct any injustice Rumania suffered."

Budapest Scornful

The occasion for Antonescu's speech, delivered in the mountain town of Alba Julia, was a commemoration of the twenty-second anniversary of Rumania's acquisition of Transylvania.

(In Budapest, official Hungarian quarters looked scornfully on the speech. "What is being said in Rumania is of no importance and of no interest to us," they declared. "Our only concern is that order be maintained there and that our nationals be properly treated."

(Hungary regained northern Transylvania, about half the province, in an Axis-dictated settlement with Rumania last August 30. It had been taken from Hungary in the dissolution of the Austro-Hungarian Empire after the World War.)

"No Longer Alone"

Antonescu (who has been confronted with a revolt by Iron Guard extremists taking assassins' revenge on many officials of the former regime of abdicated King Carol) pleaded with the guard that he had the right to give it orders on the grounds that he, too, had been "persecuted" by its foes.

Antonescu urged members of the guard to "submit yourselves unquestioningly to the laws of the country," to maintain perfect order and to "work in harmony with all Rumanians" for internal peace.

Declaring that the day was one of "sorrow, suffering and reproaches" because of the loss of half of Transylvania, he vaguely referred to some new Axis plan.

"Rumania is no longer alone. I can say no more now for I am a soldier and a politician. But the day will come when you will know what I did at Rome and Berlin. We must

George Sees Corporation Tax of 30%

Big Boost in Income Levies Predicted To Pay Defense Bill

By the Associated Press

Senator George, of Georgia, ranking Democratic member of the Senate Finance Committee, expressed the view yesterday that the corporation income tax rate might be boosted as high as 30 per cent before the National defense program is paid for.

The present rate is 24 per cent on corporations with annual net incomes of $25,000 or more. Smaller corporations pay lower rates.

George added that higher taxes on individual incomes also were very much in the picture for the future. He emphasized that he was thinking in long-range terms and had no idea whether any tax increases were in store for business at the next session of Congress.

Congressional fiscal leaders said after a conference with President Roosevelt Friday night that no further retroactive taxes on 1940 incomes were contemplated. They left the impression, however, that increases could be expected on 1941 incomes, both corporate and individual.

Woman, 68, Beaten By Mysterious Attacker in Room

A 68-year-old woman was recovering at Emergency Hospital last night after being beaten on the face and head by a mysterious assailant believed to have wielded a lead pipe.

The victim, Arabella Macfarland, was found unconscious and bleeding in her first-floor room at the Southern Club, a boarding house at 1400 New Hampshire Avenue Northwest, early yesterday.

3 Die as Crash Traps Pupils In Flaming Car

Two Others in Party Returning From Dance Are Critically Burned

Three Central High School pupils were killed and two other Washington youngsters were critically burned early yesterday when their coupe caught fire in a collision with another automobile on Lee Highway near Fairfax, Va.

The triple tragedy, which climaxed an evening of entertainment at a barn dance in nearby Virginia, brought the traffic death toll for the week-end in Washington and nearby areas to seven. Those killed in the Fairfax collision and fire were:

Doris Finlayson, 16, daughter of Curtis Finlayson, of 1439 Newton Street Northwest, an automobile painter.

Aeneas Anthony Collins, 18, son of William J. Collins, of 1927 Park Road Northwest, a second-hand furniture dealer.

Dennis Burdis, 14, son of Joseph Burdis, of 1495 Newton Street Northwest, a Navy Yard employe.

Others severely burned were William Remington, 14, of 1324 Otis Place Northwest, and Robert Carlton, 15, of 3308 Nineteenth Street Northwest, classmates at Powell Junior High School. Remington was at Georgetown Hospital and Carlton at the Alexandria Hospital.

Injured in the smashup were R. W. Jackson, 26, of Aldie, Va.; his wife, Hattie, 22, and their son, James, 4.

Fairfax County police said the car loaded with the Washington youngsters was hit in the rear by the Jackson machine, causing an explosion that immediately enveloped the first car in flames.

Paul Brewington, 18, of 1473 Irving Street, and Helen Peterson, 17, of 1439 Newton Street, were in another car that was accompanying the one that caught fire.

Battles with Bottles

Liquor-Store Bandit Trapped By Champagne 'Christening'

A bottle of champagne hurled by an irate holdup victim led to the arrest of a 32-year-old colored man yesterday.

The sequence of events had a quiet beginning Saturday night when two colored men called upon Samuel Hutcher, proprietor of a liquor store at 300 Kennedy Street Northwest.

One of the men asked for a bottle of whisky. Hutcher, suspicious, instructed his daughter to get the brand, while he moved toward the cash register to withdraw the money.

"Wait a minute. Leave that there or I'll blow your brains out," the second man snapped as he drew a revolver.

"Why didn't you say so?" Hutcher said he responded mildly to the gunman, while the latter's companion went through the cash register.

As they fled with $120, Hutcher seized a bottle of champagne and struck the bandit with the money squarely in the back of the head. He quickly groped for another missile, and this time grabbed a less expensive bottle, containing domestic whisky, which caught the man with the gun in the pit of the back and nearly toppled him. Miss Lena Hutcher, 25, the daughter, topped it all off with a chaser when she heaved a bottle of ginger ale at the bandits, which caused the one with the money to drop $20 in bills.

The sequel took place yesterday morning when Private C. B. Ruffin, of No. 2 Precinct, in making his routine check of Freedmen's Hospital, noted that one man applied for treatment of a head wound.

The suspect was taken to police headquarters, where Hutcher identified him.

Chest Drive In Final Push

"It has been done before. It can be done today."

Thus Community Chest General Chairman Chauncey G. Parker, jr., last night challenged several thousand volunteer workers who in the next 24 hours will strive to raise the rest of $185,000 necessary to reach the campaign's $2,000,000 goal.

Capital unit workers will gather for a final analysis of last-minute results today at 8 p. m., with the hope of reporting a 100 per cent victory for their units at tomorrow's noon luncheon at the Willard Hotel.

Workers continued their efforts steadily all day yesterday. In suburban areas of Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties volunteers concentrated on making out-of-the-way calls which, because of distance or weather, had been neglected.

French Battle Siam Planes

By the Associated Press

Hanoi, French Indo-China (Monday), Dec. 2.—French and Thai warplanes fought for 20 minutes above the border town of Thakhek yesterday, it was reported here today, but the result of the battle was not announced.

At the same time, fighting on the Thai-Indo China border appeared to be expanding as the French exacted "reprisals" for two attacks on Thakhek and Savannakhet last Thursday and yesterday.

The details of the operations along the border, where the French have been reported concentrating forces, were not made known.

The principal cities of southern Indo-China are taking blackout precautions against possible Thai bombing raids while all French women and children have been removed from the border regions. Thus far,

Lowest temperatures of the season were forecast for Washington today as a mass of cold air sweeping rapidly eastward brought midwinter readings to a large portion of the eastern seaboard yesterday.

The Weather Bureau predicted generally fair for today with lowest temperature about 28. From a high of 51 at 10 a. m. yesterday, the official thermometer began dropping into the 30's before midnight last night. The prediction for tomorrow is increasing cloudiness.

In many sections snow accompanied the cold.

Japan Prefers Peace in Orient, Officials Say

Navy Will Not Disturb Situation Unless Hand Is Forced, Tokyo Claims

By Joseph Newman
Copyright by New York Tribune Inc.

Tokio (Monday), Dec. 2.—Informed naval circles said today the Japanese navy will not disturb the present situation in the Orient unless there occurs some unforeseen incident, involving Japanese and American or British warships in the western part of the Pacific.

This policy, now taking positive shape among highest naval officers in Tokyo, conforms with the government's mild foreign policy which slowly and cautiously is being disclosed through the apparently challenging attitude of Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka during his first few days in office and the subsequent conclusion of an alliance with the Axis powers.

Occasional outbursts against America or Britain in the press by government officials are not to be over-emphasized in view of present developments taking place out of public sight, as they are meant to conceal an important change of national policy and to prevent dangerous reaction by radical minorities.

To make possible successful realization of this change, it may be observed that the war and navy ministers, during the last few days, have been seeking to strengthen the government's hand, so that it may be able to resist not only economic groups which are displeased with the cabinet's totali-

Navy Promotes 20 Captains To Admirals

106 Commanders Made Captains; Marine Corps Generals Advanced

To meet officer needs of the Nation's swiftly expanding defense establishment, President Roosevelt last night approved promotion of 20 naval captains to become rear admirals, 106 commanders to be captains, and three brigadier generals in the Marine Corps to the rank of major general.

The promotions give the Navy 110 rear admirals. The Marine Corps now will have six major generals and six brigadier generals.

The Marine Corps selections elevate Brig. Gen. Clayton B. Vogel, of Washington, commander of the Second Marine Brigade at San Diego, Calif.; Brig. Gen. Holland M. Smith, of Montgomery, Ala., commander of the First Brigade at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and Brig.

U. S. Mission Learns Secrets Of New Nazi, British Weapons

By the Associated Press

High-ranking Army Air Corps officers who recently returned from London brought back data on a number of new British and German weapons, it was learned yesterday.

Maj. Gen. Barton K. Yount, commander of the newly created Southeast Air District, and Brig. Gen. James E. Chaney, head of the Air Defense Command, described the results of their special mission in recent talks to groups of officers at the War Department, but most of the information was carefully withheld from the public.

Officers who heard them said, however, that the discussions contained no explanation of the mysterious bluish light ray reported by London observers in the last few days and mentioned as a possible new weapon.

British experts have passed stories concerning Bienheim bomber planes which the Royal Air Force has converted into fighters equipped with "an ear" for the interception of night raiders.

Because sound travels relatively slowly, the report aroused conjecture here as to whether the British were experimenting with a device for planes similar to that on which the United States Army is working as a substitute for the old type sound detectors.

About the only German innovation which the American observers reported was a parachute bomb. It was described as a particularly powerful explosive which detonates about ten seconds after reaching the ground and which is capable of leveling a whole block. Some sources suggested it was lowered by parachute to prevent it from burying itself in the earth.

work and make sacrifices to regain our rights."

Neither "face nor arrogance" will ever be able to drive Rumania from Transylvania, the premier said. "Right rules the world now and right shall be ours."

Keitel Sent to Rumania

Budapest (Monday), Dec. 2 (U.P.)—Diplomats heard early today that the chief of the German supreme command, Gen. Field Marshal Wilhelm Keitel, has been sent to Rumania, ostensibly to crush internal disorders that have spread bloodshed across the Balkan nation.

Hungarian newspapers, in Bucharest dispatches, reported the slaying of two more prominent Rumanian political leaders, former Premier Ion Gigurtu and Georges Bratianu, but direct inquiries in Bucharest failed to provide confirmation of the reports.

Field Marshal Keitel was said in diplomatic quarters here to be either in Rumania or en route there with several staff officers.

In addition to directing measures for the suppression of the Rumanian disorders, in which Iron Guardists assassinated 66 political foes last week, Keitel was believed to be under instructions to inspect Germany's garrisons in Rumania.

Disorders Spread

The unconfirmed reports of the slaying of Gigurtu and Bratianu were published alongside newspaper accounts quoting travelers from Rumania as describing fresh rioting and disorders in various parts of the country.

Diplomats speculated that Keitel's reported dispatch to Rumania must mean far more than any localized penal action against the Iron Guard terrorists.

The Iron Guard extremists must be completely curbed without delay, it was said, if German authority and security is to be protected from being undermined.

Refugees Enter Bulgaria

Budapest, Dec. 1 (INS).—Hundreds of refugees fleeing Rumania's Iron Guard terror were reported tonight to have crossed the border into Bulgaria after paddling in crowded canoes across the Danube River, dodging rifle volleys fired by Rumanian frontier troops.

Men, women and children—many of them attired in little more than night clothes after climbing through windows to escape Iron Guard bands—took part in the perilous mass exodus, which coincided with reports that a new earthquake rocked Bucharest. Only slight damage was reported.

Nazi No. 1 Ace Reported Lost; Had Bagged 56

By the United Press

Berlin, Dec. 1.—Maj. Helmuth Wick, Germany's No. 1 air ace, is believed to have drowned in the English Channel after being shot down in a dog fight with a British plane last Thursday.

Maj. Wick, commander of the Richthofen wing of the German air force and youngest major in the Nazi armed forces was said to have bagged his fifty-sixth plane of the war a few minutes before he was forced to parachute into the Channel from his flaming plane.

The announcement that the 25-year-old Wick was missing was made by the official German DNB news agency. Later Nazi air force quarters disclosed that Wick's best friend, also a fighter pilot, witnessed the air duel and saw the commander shot down.

According to these quarters, Wick's friend gave the following description of the battle:

A group of German planes, spread out widely, criss-crossed the English Channel last Thursday afternoon seeking British planes.

Wick and a comrade paired off and met a superior force of British Spitfire and Hurricane planes near the Isle of Wight. Dog fights quickly developed.

Wick shot down one of the British planes—his fifty-sixth of the war—but before he could bring himself into a protective position another British plane approached from the rear and loosed several volleys of machine gun fire.

Engaged in a dog-fight with another British plane, Wick's comrade could not go to his commander's aid. But after shaking off his attacker, he said he saw Wick dropping out of his Messerschmitt. Wick's parachute blossomed and he went falling into the channel.

The commander's friend pursued Wick's victor in a "cold rage" and reported he shot down the Englishman, after which he eluded the remainder of the British under protection of clouds and returned to his base.

German rescue planes and boats immediately were dispatched in an effort to find Wick but they were unsuccessful.

Wick was born August 5, 1915, the son of Charles Wick, a businessman of Mannheim. He entered the Luftwaffe in April, 1936, and was promoted to the rank of lieutenant in September, 1938. Last October he was personally decorated by Adolf Hitler.

Gen. Charles F. B. Price, of Wayne, Pa., a member of the examining board in Washington.

Three battleship commanders were on the Navy list. They are Capt. Harold M. Bemis, of the California; Capt. Jonas H. Ingram, of the Tennessee, and Capt. William R. Munroe, of the Mississippi.

Bemis, well known in Washington, received the Distinguished Service Medal for his work as a World War submarine commander serving in British waters. Ingram, a native of Jeffersonville, Ind., was head football coach at the Naval Academy in 1915-16. Capt. Munroe, who hails from Waco, Tex., was a White House aide 27 years ago.

Famous Annapolis Name

The Ingram name is one of the most famous in Annapolis gridiron history. William A. "Navy Bill" Ingram of the class of 1920, hung up a distinguished record both as a player and as a coach. "Navy Bill" is a brother of Capt. Ingram, as was the late Lieut. Homer L. Ingram, also a well known athlete. Capt. Ingram's son, Ensign William T. Ingram of the class of 1938, carried on the family's athletic tradition.

Brig. Gen. Vogel was one of the heroes of the Knickerbocker Theater disaster January 28, 1922. He was in command of a detachment of Marines from the Marine Barracks here that aided in the work of removing dead and wounded from the wrecked building. When word came that the walls were about to collapse, Gen. Vogel shouted:

"To hell with the walls; let them fall; but for God's sake, if we are to die, let us die like men and Marines."

With a brilliant record in the World War—he went to France in June, 1917, with the Fifth Regiment—Brig. Gen. Smith is regarded as an outstanding combat commander. For his courage at Belleau Wood he won the Croix de Guerre with palm.

Brig. Gen. Price commanded the Fourth Regiment during the tense days of the Japanese bombardment of Shanghai. He saw service in Mexico in 1914 and later in France and Nicaragua.

The Navy list includes Capt. Richard S. Edwards, native of Philadelphia, whom Secretary of the Navy Edison last year awarded the Navy Cross for the "superior and outstanding manner in which he performed" rescue and salvage operations following the Squalus submarine disaster.

Capt. Patrick N. L. Bellinger who also is on the list, was commanding officer of the NC-1 which made an overseas flight from Newfoundland to the vicinity of the Azores in May, 1918. He also holds the Navy Cross. He is a native of Cheraw, N. C.

Capt. Arthur S. Carpenter, also promoted, is a Washingtonian. He was in command of the Destroyer Fanning which made the first American capture of a German submarine and crew during the World War. He was decorated with the Distinguished Service Medal and the British Distinguished Service Order in recognition of the feat.

One of the elevated officers now holds the temporary rank of rear admiral. He is Alexander Hamilton Van Keuren, assistant chief of the Bureau of Ships.

Others on the list are Capt. Roy W. Ryden, manager of the Norfolk Navy Yard; Capt. Howard S. Herbert, superintendent of ship building at the New York Shipbuilding Corp., Camden, N. J.; Capt. Allan Chantry, jr., manager of the Philadelphia Navy Yard; Capt. Thomas Withers, ordnance inspector, Navy Torpedo Station at Newport, R. I.; Capt. John S. McCain, on duty at Naval Air Station, San Diego; Capt. Augustin T. Beauregard, in charge of the Naval mission to Brazil; Capt. Randall Jacobs, assistant chief of the Bureau of Navigation; Capt. John Hoover, Great Falls, Mont.; Capt. Ernest D. McWhorter, first commander of the Yorktown; Capt. William S. Farber, Norfolk Naval Hospital; Capt. Robert C. at the same time stated his opposition to minority control of vital industries. But he said it would be "an inexcusable thing" if Mexicans failed to facilitate the development of untapped resources.

Wallace Gives Indorsement

Mexico City, Dec. 1 (AP).—United States Vice President-elect Henry A. Wallace, in a broadcast to the United States, declared he was "in complete agreement" with the "lofty sentiments of Pan-American solidarity" expressed by Mexico's new President in his inaugural address.

President Avila Camacho's statement regarding hemispheric solidarity was "one of the strongest which has been made by any Mexican statesman," Wallace declared, and said the new President "appears to vision a strengthening of the economic power of the hemisphere, and a day when the whole hemisphere shall cooperate economically so as to be able to meet any challenge which might come from the Old World.

"These sentiments . . . bear striking similarity to the sentiments of our own President Roosevelt, who has so often talked to our people about the Good Neighbor policy, and about the solidarity of the nations of the Western Hemisphere."

Among those from the United States at the ceremony were Representative Sol Bloom and Mrs. Bloom of New York; Representative Marvin Jones, of Texas; Senators Sheridan Downey of California and Dennis Chavez of New Mexico; David Dubinsky, of New York, president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, and his wife and daughter, Jean; Morton Downey, the singer; Carr Collins, of Dallas, Tex., representing Gov. O'Daniel; former Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, and William Prescott Allen, publisher of the Laredo Times.

tarian policies and to which a conciliatory attitude is being adopted, but also those active minorities advocating a militant foreign policy.

This aim can be seen in the representation made last Friday to the cabinet by Navy Minister Koshiro Oikawa who declared:

"I feel it is necessary for the government to take measures for the purpose of strengthening the guiding power of the government."

The representation was supported publicly by the war minister.

The recent appointment of Admiral Kichisaburo Nomura as Ambassador to the United States, and of Kenkichi Yoshizawa, liberal-minded diplomat of the pre-China war days, as the new trade envoy to the Netherlands East Indies are part of a definite policy of preparing the ground for a partial settlement of differences between America and Japan.

Whether or not it will succeed, it is said here, will depend upon the ability of the government to strengthen its position against the opposition, the absence of disturbances by the younger and more militant officers in the army and navy, and finally by the reception in Washington to conciliatory efforts being made in this country.

Having received assurances by high army, navy and government officials that they will not embark on ventures which would embarrass him while in Washington and make his mission impossible, it is understood that Nomura has been conferring with Premier Prince Konoye and Foreign Minister Matsuoka on the policy to be adopted toward the United States.

This policy is to be based on assurances that the Japanese army and naval forces will not disturb the situation involving the Netherlands East Indies and British possessions in the Far East.

No Business Can Stand Still

'HINDSIGHT AND FORESIGHT'
a weekly column by
Holgar J. Johnson
President Institute of Life Insurance

NO business—however well-run—is good enough to stand still. This applies especially to life insurance. Our business has a fine record of public service; but it has also a clear-cut social obligation which dictates that it can never stand on its record. It must progress.

JOHNSON

This progress depends upon efforts in many directions—among others upon research. Not all research has been for the purpose of producing material things. It involves also analyses of markets, the search for improved methods of distribution and better service.

It is this kind of research—dealing with the human side—that helps life insurance do a better job. For the past 20 years, the Life Insurance Sales Research Bureau, supported by the insurance companies, has been conducting research which has improved distribution methods and raised the service standards of the agent.

Now, there's a new step forward. The companies have just established the S. S. Huebner Foundation at the University of Pennsylvania. Named for a celebrated scholar who has devoted his life to the teaching of insurance subjects, it will promote new research in life insurance and at the same time develop more trained teachers of life insurance for American colleges and universities.

Thus life insurance recognizes again its social obligations to find better ways to conduct its business in the public interest. It recognizes the fact that the millions of policyholders who own life insurance have a great stake in the business; therefore, it cannot stand still.

British Hope to Outflank Nazis as Result of Greek Invasion

By Raymond Daniell
Copyright by New York Times

London, Dec. 1.—The Greeks' successful resistance to Italian aggression thus far has raised hopes that what the British are beginning to regard as Mussolini's blunder, will prove the undoing of his senior partner, Adolf Hitler.

Greece is beginning to be regarded as the potential bridgehead from which British armies will regain a foothold on the continent for an attack on Germany's vulnerable back door.

This idea was expressed today by Lieut. Col. Leopold C. M. S. Amery, secretary of state for India and Burma, speaking at Newmarket. He suggested that Italy's attack against Greece may have been an attempt by Mussolini to "double cross" Hitler, and said that the Fascist leader's blunder might prove of "immense, even of decisive influence upon the whole future course of the struggle."

Col. Amery proceeded to indicate what is coming to be regarded here as the possible strategy of the war pattern of victory. One of the most significant passages of his speech was that in which he said:

"If we can enable Greece to hold her own until we have disposed of the Italians in Egypt we shall have secured for our armies a foothold wherefrom we might threaten to flank any German attack against Turkey.

"From that foothold we might eventually, with our own armies and the new allies whom our growing strength will gather, deal a mortal thrust at the German dragon, not against his scaly armor in the Siegfried line, but against his soft underside."

The whole face of the war has been transformed in the last few weeks, Amery said, declaring that throughout the Middle East, and even further afield, Britain has been encouraged and potential enemies have been disheartened.

Amery indicated his belief—shared by many other responsible officials in this country—that Mussolini had rushed in unprepared into the Greek adventure because the "lesser gangster," impatient at the way in which he had been kept waiting for his share of the loot from France, thought he could "double-cross" his fellow, and pocket at least one valuable asset, and at the same time obtain a bigger voice in the carving up of the Balkans.

Amery said the threat of an attempted invasion of this country still existed but expressed the opinion that the chances of success were much less than three months ago. Nevertheless, he said, enemy attempts to destroy shipping, wear down industry and the morale of the civil population by continued air attacks are a real danger.

Then he pointed out that in Egypt, the British were still faced with the problem engendered by the fall of France "which has deprived us of free use of the Mediterranean and has placed the long journey around Africa between our forces in the Middle East and reinforcement from home."

Despite the real perils confronting this country there are many here who believe that the tide is turning. There was Blockade Minister Hugh Dalton's speech last night predicting that within a few months Germany's war effort will be cramped by a shortage of oil.

Contract Bridge

End Play for Six

Jerome Schener of Boston, a strong player, sends another slam hand which was optimistically bid and made, this time more through skill than luck. He has nothing but praise for his partner, Cecil Head, expert and Yale College Club star.

"Although I do not approve or even condone obvious overbidding, if you must do it the time to choose is when Cecil Head as your partner is playing the hand," writes our Boston friend.

"For instance, there is one from the quarter-finals of the Northeastern teams, played recently," he continues, referring to the cards shown in today's box. "My bid of six diamonds was bad; I should have signed off with five spades.

"The only chance of fulfilling the contract was based on the distribution of the heart suit. If West had a singleton king or queen, or either hand had the king-queen doubleton, or if East had the king, queen with others and split his equals, or if either East or West had a doubleton, including the king or queen, the hand could be brought in. The last named was, of course, the best chance, but Cecil played for the possibility of any of them.

"He won the opening lead in the dummy and led a low heart at once. At this early stage it might be difficult for East to see the necessity of unblocking the king or queen from a doubleton. The ace won, then a low trump to the dummy; the ace of clubs was cashed and a club was trumped. Next a diamond to the king, back to the ace, and a diamond and club were trumped, leaving South in the lead.

"Cecil exited with a low heart and it was all over. West won and had to lead a diamond for a ruff-discard. It would not help East to overtake as it would set up the jack. I admit others of the country's first ten players would make the same play, but the kibitzers were greatly impressed. It was well done.

Bayonets Credited For Greek Victories

Fierce Charges Turned Tide at Pogradetz, Koritza

By the Associated Press

With the Greek Army, Dec. 1.—The Greek practice of forestalling an immediate counterattack by cleaning up around a town before its capture is claimed, accounts for any delay in the high command's announcement of the fall of the fortified Albanian city of Pogradetz.

The Greeks arrived at this important Italian inland base a week ago and took over the rocky heights to the south. Some of the Greeks drove on past the city.

The Italians had withdrawn almost all of their troops from Pogradetz itself by last Tuesday and were defending strong mountain positions west and north of the town with fresh reinforcements who had been sped to the front to prop up the badly sagging lines.

Hurl Big Shells

They lay behind concrete fortifications on the heights above Pogradetz, supported by strong artillery.

From Monday to Thursday they threw big shells at the Greeks while the Greeks pounded their positions.

On Thursday the Greeks opened their main attack, charging the Italians with bayonets and hand grenades and finally crushing the last important resistance.

Pogradetz was in their hands then, but there was still a job of mopping up the area before Pogradetz could be counted safe. Therefore only advance units entered the city at first. The larger forces followed after the Italians had been pushed well back of the immediate area.

In announcing the capture of Pogradetz, then, the high command was simply following the practice established at the start of the war nearly five weeks ago.

Many towns and villages are said to have fallen into Greek hands which have not yet been mentioned in official communiques.

Bayonets Prove Decisive

The use of bayonets, which many military observers predicted would be discarded as worthless in modern warfare, is proving a decisive factor in the Greek army's drive.

Soldiers and neutral observers declare unanimously that the capture of Pogradetz and Koritza was achieved mainly at the point of the bayonet in the hands of Greece's fierce Macedonian shock troops.

The Greek newspaper Progref answered what it called an Italian radio assertion that Greek bayonet fighting is "a barbarous form of warfare which shows a nation is uncivilized" by declaring that "bayonet fighting certainly is less barbarous than using Italian bombing planes against noncombatants . . . It is not our fault if the enemy lacks the courage of soul against these bayonet charges . . . Greek bayonets will continue to do good work in Albania."

In the central sector the Greeks have made important gains and are still advancing daily. The countryside is wild and mountainous and there is little concerted resistance.

Italians Elusive

The Greeks in this sector are finding the Italians elusive. Correspondents with the Greek army have been told that Greeks pursued three Italian battalions through the mountains for days before they sighted them. Three times they caught up with them and engaged the rear guard, but each time the Italians speedily resumed their retreat.

Some Greek units, officers say, have penetrated a three or four-day journey by mule into Albania.

The weather, snowy and rainy and freezing, is brutal and both sides suffer extremely. Many of the Italians have no shoes. Their clothes are tattered.

In the southern sector the Italian resistance is still strong although the fighting there appears to be confined largely to cleaning up isolated Italian detachments holding to heights.

Fascist soldiers.

[There was no confirmation whatsoever of this report, which was not an official claim. The New York Times on Saturday said the Greeks officially placed at 8,350 the total number of Italians captured in more than a month of war. Thus "7,000 additional" prisoners would indicate a tremendous Greek victory, if the report is authentic—Editor's note.]

Dispatches from the front placed the Greek vanguard barely 45 miles from the Albanian capital of Tirana, and Italian commanders were said to be rushing reinforcements into mountain positions north of Pogradetz in an effort to stem the Greek drive which has opened up the main road to Tirana in the direction of Elbasan.

The Greek commander was said to be using small units of soldiers who are good hand-to-hand fighters in the mountainous regions where the Italians are unable to use mechanized forces or massed manpower.

According to local reports the Evzones hardiest of the Greek troops, are firmly convinced they are invincible. Their commanders reportedly are having a hard time restraining them in view of the fixed idea that they must push the Italians back into the sea.

Retreat in Snow

Belgrade, Dec. 1 (U.P.).—A general Italian retreat into central Albania, through knee-deep mountain snow and under a murderous aerial bombardment, was reported from the frontier tonight as Greek cavalry pushed northward from the captured Fascist base of Pogradetz.

A three-hour battle that littered the snowy heights of the Mokra Mountains with nearly 800 dead and wounded was said in dispatches from Struga to have given the Greeks domination of strategic heights overlooking Cafasane pass north of Pogradetz near the shore of Lake Ochrida.

From the mountain peaks the Greeks are expected to deliver their next major assault against the important Cafasane-Elbasan Road, first toward the town of Cafasane itself and then northwestward against Elbasan, only 20 miles south of Tirana, capital of Albania.

Unofficial border dispatches from Struga and Ochrid on the Yugoslav border described new Greek advances all along the tortuous mountain front, from Konispolis near the seacoast to Lake Ochrida.

Italian reinforcements were being thrown into the lines, it was added, in an effort to check the Greek advance but the Greeks' fighting spirit was said to be running high as a result of the capture of Pogradetz, one of their major victories of the war.

Rome Claims Successes

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Dec. 1.—Italian troops on the Albanian front were still fighting off Greek attacks yesterday, it is stated in the latest war bulletin. The assaults were repulsed and followed by "vigorous counter-attacks," according to the communique, which says that the Giulia Division of the Alpini particularly distinguished themselves.

As always, the communique is devoid of details. It speaks of "renewed attacks" by Greeks, which indicates that the Italians are still on the defensive. On the other hand, the Italian bulletins of the past four days give no indications of further withdrawals.

Writers Find Italian Ships Barely Hurt

Paintless Patches Blamed on Fire of Vessels' Own Guns

By Richard G. Massock
Associated Press Staff Writer

Somewhere in the Mediterranean, Dec. 1.—On the invitation of the Italian government, anxious to refute British reports of damage to an Italian battleship, cruiser and two destroyers in a sea battle last Wednesday, foreign correspondents today inspected five Fascist naval vessels.

The 35,000-ton battleship Vittorio Veneto and 23,622-ton Giulio Cesare were taking on fuel and munitions after what their officers described as an attack on a British naval force escorting a convoy off Cape Teulada, south of Sardinia, in the western Mediterranean.

The only scars of battle either dreadnaught showed were a few bare patches where, it was explained, fire from their own 15-inch batteries peeled paint off their gun turrets.

Cruisers Unscathed

Neither was there seen the slightest trace of damage on the three 10,000-ton sister cruisers Fiume, Pola and Goritzia, which the Italians declared also took part in the battle.

They have contended repeatedly that only the destroyer Lanciere was damaged. Three admirals who commanded the Fascist squadrons in the battle said their forces included the two battleships, six cruisers and several flotillas of destroyers.

We inspected five of the eight large ships from bridge to engine room today and are to visit others tomorrow.

The naval encounter between the Sardinian and North African coasts has been a subject of claim and counter-claim between Italy and Britain.

A British admiralty communique last Thursday listed these results:

A battleship of the Littorio class seen to have been hit by a torpedo. (Stefani, Italian news agency, said the Vittorio Veneto "dodged" a British torpedo.)

An aerial torpedo hit "almost certainly obtained" on a 10,000-ton Bolzano-class cruiser.

A dive-bomber attack on three 6-inch-gun cruisers, with one apparently damaged and two "close misses" scored.

A destroyer of the Grecale class down by the stern, listing heavily and stopping and another destroyer listing slightly and losing way.

Four battleships make up the Littorio class, Italy's newest and mightiest dreadnaughts. Besides the Vittorio Veneto, there are the Roma and Impero, which are not known to have been commissioned yet, and the Littorio, which the British have declared was crippled in the Armistice Day aerial torpedo attack on the Italian naval base at Taranto.

Highway Construction Gains to Be Reported

War Sidelights

Petain Seen Halting Laval Trip to Reich

Italians Boast Of New Type Plane For Air Fighting

Bern, Switzerland, Dec. 1 (AP).—The expected visit of Vice Premier Laval of France to Berlin was reported tonight to have been postponed by the personal orders of France's chief of state, Marshal Petain.

[Berlin has denied a Laval Berlin visit was contemplated.]

A diplomatic report said the marshal was reluctant to have Laval go to Berlin for the present because of fear that the Vice Premier might return with promises given on plans which Petain himself could not approve.

On the other hand, Marshal Petain himself was reported planning his first state visit to Paris on an official "inspection trip" within the next few weeks.

Italy to Introduce New Type of Plane

Rome, Dec. 1 (AP).—Italy's air force either has adopted or is ready to introduce a new type of plane, the Italian press indicated today and the Turin newspaper Gazetta de Popolo said it would "bring a revolution" in air fighting.

Il Popolo di Roma pictured it as an "all-metal machin with retractable carriage, moving only by interna. reaction."

Others said it was driven by compressed gas which would lift as well as propel i.. Otherwise, the plane was said to retain other characteristics of modern aircraft, such as wings, rudders and fuselage.

Quisling Unhurt As Bomb Explodes

Stockholm, Dec. 1 (AP).—A bomb exploded near Maj. Vidkun Quisling, Norwegian Nazi leader, but did not injure him during a recent visit to Frederikstad in southern Norway, the newspaper Dagens Nyheters reported from Oslo today. Whether anyone was injured was not stated.

Britain to Allow Two Lipsticks a Year

London, Dec. 1 (AP).—The shiny nose today became a sign of war sacrifice.

Restriction on the sale of cosmetics, now effective, cuts the volume to 25 per cent of last year's figure which means about two lipsticks and two boxes of powder per year per girl.

Clergymen Oppose Hoover's Proposal

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—Thirty-four Protestant clergymen and educators made public today a statement opposing former President Hoover's proposal for lifting the British blockade to permit food shipments to conquered European nations.

Thousands Seeking Plane Passage to U. S.

Lisbon, Dec. 1 (AP).—Lisbon, almost Europe's last gateway to the New World, still is crowded with refugees more than a half year after the German advance started the exodus from the Low Countries and France.

Shipping circles said passenger liners plying between Portugal and the United States were all too few to accommodate the thousands seeking passage and said that prospects for the future held little promise of improvement.

Croat Bombs Mar Holiday Of Yugoslavs

Extremists Set Off Explosives at Homes Of Party Moderates

By the Associated Press

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Dec. 1.—Small but noisy protest bombs set off by Croat extremists today marred Yugoslavia's celebration of the Day of Union—the twenty-second anniversary of the proclamation of the union of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes.

At Zagreb small bombs exploded in front of the homes of Vice Premier Dr. Vladimir Macek, leader of the Croat Peasant Party, and Juraj Krnjevici, party secretary. Both are moderates.

Other bombs burst in front of the residence of an army commandant and Banovina Palace, Peasant Party headquarters. Windows were broken but no casualties were reported.

(The Swiss radio quoted the Yugoslav telegrapth agency as saying that attempts had been made in Zagreb on the lives of the chief of the province, his deputy, and Vice Premier Macek. No arrests were reported.)

Croat extremists demand the separation of Croatia from the rest of Yugoslavia, a kingdom welded after the World War. Croatia formerly was part of the crown lands of the Hungarian section of Austria-Hungary, and since its incorporation into Yugoslavia has been the scene of much disaffection with whst the Croats called the dominance of the Serbs in Yugoslavia.

The anniversary was observed throughout the nation with church services, and patriotic exercises stressing the solidarity of the Yugoslav people in a common determination to defend the country.

U. S. Trying to Starve Millions, Says Gayda

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Dec. 1.—The United States is accused by Virginio Gayda in today's Voce d'Italia of setting out to starve the conquered states of Europe. "Germany's resolute and totalitarian attack against Britain will therefore have its inspiration and justification on behalf of the tens of millions of men condemned to hunger by the Anglo-Saxon coalition," he says.

British Reported Getting Listless

Writer Likens Signs Of Overconfidence To Those of France

By Merrill Mueller
International News Service Staff Writer

London, Dec. 1.—Winter listlessness is setting in early in England. I can already see here the same traces of over-complacency and over-confidence that I saw in France last winter.

Only this time it is the civilian front behind the air force, navy and army—although the army is partially infected.

Informed sources disclosed tonight that the government is studying strong methods of dealing with a number of small issues, none of which represents a major crisis, but the accumulation of which could put England in a bad spot.

Sure Britain Will Win

Britain will win this war, say these sources, because there are enough people imbued with the real English spirit to make up for and counter-act the slackers.

But it is against the slacker section of the populace—principally among the higher and middle classes—that new and sterner measures will be forthcoming.

It is believed the government is reluctantly considering emergency powers, but there is no question of a dictatorship, or collapsing morale, starvation or internal strife.

The only question is one of getting England into full war stride by spring.

More Taxes Studied

Pep talks by government leaders indicate that the government is awake to the need for a number of maneuvers to keep listlessness from spreading. The measures under consideration by the government are:

Further taxation, principally of the higher classes in answer to labor's appeal for "full conscription" of wealth and an end to what labor alleges to be "easy tax-dodging by the wealthy."

Means of evacuating cities and rehousing bombed refugees—A problem which, despite months of brilliant talk, still finds bombed cities overcrowded and people living publicly hand-to-mouth amid filth—and stoically "taking it."

Steps to hold down inflation tendencies and control the constantly rising cost of living.

Ferreting out the war profiteers of whom there are many.

A stronger program for cleaning up bomb damage.

Appeal to America

Finally, measures are being considered to convince the United States that every assistance is needed by Britain now—not because of emergencies, but to shorten the struggle. For every plane and every merchant ship that Britain has, acquired or can obtain from America lifts the public morale in addition to improving British war equipment, British quarters assert.

British Boats Torpedo Nazi Supply Ship

Admiralty Reveals Loss of Submarine Of 1,090 Tons

By James B. Reston.
Copyright by New York Times

London, Dec. 1.—The Admiralty announced tonight the loss of the submarine Triad, of 1,090 tons, but added that a patrol of British motor boats had torpedoed a German supply ship, the S. S. Santos, of 5,943 tons, off the Dutch coast this morning.

The Santos, which evidently was carrying supplies along the Dutch coast to German troops in Belgium and France, was located off the mouth of the River Scheldt. She was protected by a German warship but British mosquito craft roared toward her and released their torpedoes. The warship opened fire on the British ships, one of which received minor damage from shrapnel.

Though the British ships did not report seeing the Santos hit, they picked up an SOS saying she had been torpedoed. The Admiralty said nothing about what happened to the ship or her crew.

Attack Aimed at Supplies

It was reported that a Nazi ship had been torpedoed by a British plane last Friday.

This British attack is in line with the growing trend to try to interrupt the flow of German goods down the North Sea coast into the Channel. The Nazis have mounted guns along the occupied coasts of the Netherlands, Belgium and France to protect seaborne supplies.

Because of the strain on German railroads and the recent British bombings of key lines from Germany into Flanders, the Nazis have been sending bulk cargoes by water. The British are evidently determined to halt this traffic.

British torpedo boats have been operating in all kinds of weather and helping with the Channel patrol at night. Some of these, together with British destroyers, apparently—had been operating in the North Sea Saturday night when they came across the fleet of German motor torpedo boats. The admiralty communique said the British ships chased the Germans, who got away in the darkness.

Weather Grounds Bombers

Because of adverse weather conditions there were no British bomber operations last night.

Tonight, however, residents of the Dover area reported the thud of bombs across the fog-shrouded Channel, indicating the R. A. F. had resumed its hammering of the French "invasion ports."

The Triad, one of Britain's Triton class, carried a normal complement of 53 men. She was a sistership of the Thetis, which foundered on a trial dive June 1, 1939. The communique gave no details of the submarine's loss.

Nazis Batter Coast Town, Fan Over Isle

Southampton Takes Heavy Overnight Bombardment

London, Dec. 1.—German warplanes carrying out a systematic attack along the lines by which they devastated Coventry began an assault on a south coast town tonight after giving Southampton, transatlantic shipping port, a heavy overnight bombardment.

The raiders also fanned out over England at nightfall. During the day they fought British Spitfires over the English Channel and the southeast coast. One locality was reported machine-gunned.

The British said eight German aircraft were destroyed in the day's fighting while five British planes were missing. All British pilots are safe, however, the air ministry reported.

Flares first were dropped on the south coast town. Then incendiaries followed and then the raiders dumped high explosives on the town.

Many planes were reported to have passed over the coast.

London had two air raid alarms during the early evening after going through three daylight alerts. Only a few bombs were dropped in the southern outskirts of the capital, however.

A Midland town, a southwest town and Liverpool also reported German aircraft.

The Press Association also declared the R. A. F. and anti-aircraft guns have shot down 3,006 planes over Britain and the coastal waters since the start of the war. Twenty of them were Italian, the rest German, it said.

221 Felled in Month

The Royal Air Force, official sources said, destroyed 221 Axis planes over Britain and British waters during November, exclusive of planes destroyed by anti-aircraft fire from ships or by the fleet air arm.

These sources said 201 of the planes were Nazi and 20 Italian, and that in addition 8 German planes were destroyed over Axis or Axis-occupied territory or waters.

British losses over Britain and British waters in November were 53 planes, but 28 of the pilots were saved, according to these sources.

In the middle east and the Mediterranean area the Italians lost 58 aircraft in November against 18 British planes.

British Account Of Saturday Raid

The following account of the raid on Southampton Saturday night is a compilation of the reports from there, distributed by the British Press Association and Exchange Telegraph:

Southampton, Dec. 1.—Using tactics similar to those in the "total" raid on Coventry the night of November 14-15, waves of German bombers gave this port town its worst raking of the war last night and early this morning.

The Germans attacked the town for more than seven hours and it was feared the casualty list would include a number of dead.

Townsmen called it a "blitz fire raid" and one air raid official said "if ever there was indiscriminate bombing, we have had it here."

The German bombers showered incendiaries and then high explosives, causing considerable damage to commercial property, private houses, churches, hotels and public institutions.

The guns put up a heavy barrage as the raiders circled the town.

Many buildings in the center of the city were wrecked and damage was caused in other areas.

When the raid was at its height 70 patients at a hospital were moved to a building in another part of town without a single casualty. The hospital was gutted.

Churches destroyed included Anglican and Roman Catholic, one Unitarian church and one Baptist. Among the buildings smashed were a theater, a newspaper office, a lending library and a large number of shops.

Four A. R. P. workers were killed by a bomb near their post and one officer was killed when a police station was hit.

Other casualties were principally among civilians.

'Pop Bailey's Retirement Near as 'Ghost Fleet' Fades

Only 2 Ships Remain In Navy Hero's Charge At Solomon's Island

By the Associated Press

Solomons Island, Md., Dec. 1.—Pop Bailey's job as guardian of a ghost fleet is about to run out, and, and when it does this hero who helped save the lives of nearly 800 men aboard a torpedoed American troop transport in that other World War will so ashore—to stay.

He'll take with him a Navy Cross, a personal citation and rich memories, but little else.

Now only two of his fleet of forgotten ships are left—one a rusty old freighter and the other the George Washington, which carried President Wilson to the peace conference.

Soon they may go to the scrap heap, like the Monticello and the Mount Vernon, formerly the North German Lloyd steamers Kaiser Wilhelm II and the Kronprinzessin Cecile, taken over by America when was was declared on Germany. When the last two go, Bailey's job ends.

"Pop" was Lieut. Frederick C. Bailey, senior assistant engineer officer on the Mount Vernon when she sailed from Best, September 4, 1918, with 350 wounded American soldiers and a crew of 460. The first day out a German submarine slipped by escorting destroyers and crashed a torpedo amidships. The blast wrecked the aft battery of boilers, trapping 35 men.

Bailey says he just "ran around and turned a few valves and things."

But, his citation said it "is impossible to estimate how great a factor this was in saving the ship. By his quick action (Bailey) effected closing of main steam bulkhead stops." Thus steam was kept up and the crippled vessel, filling dangerously with water, limped back to port.

When Bailey retires, he'll live in a little cottage by the Patuxent River and make model gasoline engines, his hobby.

New Japanese Drive Shattered, Chinese Claim; U.S. Loan Hailed

Hongkong (Monday), Dec. 2.—The Central (Chinese) News Agency reported today that a much-publicized Japanese offensive in Hupeh Province had been shattered by Chinese counterattacks.

The agency said the Japanese now are beating a general retreat toward their original bases.

Chungking Area Raided

Chungking, Dec. 1 (AP).—The Japanese today followed up their pact of collaboration with the puppet Nanking government with the first raid on the Chungking area in more than a month.

Japanese planes unloaded about ten bombs on a single objective down the Yangtze River from this capital. Chungking itself was not touched.

The Japanese signed their pact yesterday with Wang Ching-wei, head of the Nanking government. The government of Chiang Kai-shek has offered a reward of 100,000 Chinese dollars ($6,000) for anyone "bringing the arch-traitor to book."

A foreign office spokesman declared that the new $100,000,000 United States credit announced yesterday would give China "fresh impetus against the disturber of the peace in the Pacific."

Its size, he said, will help materially in the fight against Japan and its intrinsic value is enhanced by the fact that it came immediately after the Nanking treaty signing.

Chinese sources said they were particularly pleased that the United States gave what they called the first internaitonal reaction to Japan's recognition of the Nanking regime.

U. S. Action Called "Unjust"

Shanghai, Dec. 1 (AP). — Wang Ching-wei's publicity minister, P. S. Lin, declared today that the new United States credit of $100,000,00 to Chungking was "an unfriendly and unjust reply by a government to the friendly peace concluded between China and Japan."

Japan and the Wang government of Nanking signed treaties of collaboration and "peace" yesterday at Nanking about the time that the White House announced the credit.

The credit, Lin declared, was extended "out of spite and for the sole purpose of enabling Chungking to exhaust China's strength in useless conflict with Japan while simultaneously weakening Japan's position.

No Comment in Moscow

Moscow, Dec. 1 (AP).—A terse announcement of the new treaty of peace and recognition between Japan and Wang Ching-wei's Nanking regime in China appeared without comment today in Soviet Russia's press.

The U. S. S. R. maintains diplomatic relations with Chungking.

Morley Warns Of Power Politics Perils to U. S.

Philadelphia, Dec. 1 (AP).—Declaring that the United States' foreign policy "has the makings of power politics as pronounced as any undertaken by Hitler," Dr. Felix Morley, president of Haverford College, warned tonight that "serious repercussions" would follow the entry of this nation into the European war.

"Win, lose or draw," declared Dr. Morley in a speech prepared for a dinner celebrating the bicentennial of Mikveh Israel Congregation, "the entry of the United States into this war, which would, of course, mean war with Japan as well, would have the most serious repercussions on our political and social, to say nothing of our economic, structure."

Noting that he was speaking on the eve of the anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine, the former Washington Post editor declared:

"The real destiny of the United States is to maintain a continent of peace . . . for the positive purpose of a vital and universally helpful leadership in the establishment of world peace."

70 Sailors on Polk Register for Draft

Jersey City, N. J., Dec. 1 (AP).—The S. S. President Polk docked today after a world cruise and within a short time 70 members of its crew of 170 were registered for selective Army service, thus completing registration of American seamen aboard the few remaining larger ships that go to sea.

Joseph C. Keane, member of New York City's selective service board 19, said so far 2,800 seamen had been registered in New York Harbor and only a few tramp freighters remained to be checked.

French Battle Siamese Planes

there have been no French or foreign casualties.

Hanoi officials said there still was some slight hope of settlement because the French minister to Bangkok and the consul were remaining at their posts.

Hanoi is awaiting new instructions from the Vichy government regarding its attitude on the border fighting.

French to Retaliate

Relations between Thai and Indo-China have been tense since the Bangkok government early in September formally asked Vichy to return two small areas in Laos, western Indo-China state, which France took from Siam by force in 1907. Vichy rejected the claim.

Colonial officers here said they would retaliate with their entire strength against any major attacks by Thailand along the trouble border.

(A Domei, Japanese news agency, dispatch in Hongkong said that a Thai communique in Bangkok reported skirmishes were continuing between French and Thai border patrols.

(The communique also said Thai planes bombed two points in Indo-China and evoked a strong protest from the French).

Natives Kill Planter, Guards

The latest border incident announced at a press conference was the killing of a sailor on the Mekong River by Thai rifle fire.

Other isolated cases of unrest in various parts of Indo-China were reported. These included a disturbance in the Saigon area where it was said at least ten native civil guards and one French planter were killed in native uprisings.

Some 2,000 bandits were reported pillaging the country northward of Hanoi near Langson, between Japanese and French troop positions.

'Big Bad Wolf' Home From Africa

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—Elder Scott M. Whitaker, 25, who was the voice of Big Bad Wolf, W. C. Fields and some 50 other characters in Walt Disney cartoons before taking a leave of absence a year and a half ago to become a Mormon missionary, returned from South Africa this morning on the liner President Polk.

Elder Whitaker was one of 32 Mormon missionaries aboard. All of them received word from the Mormon Church authorities in Utah several weeks ago to return to this country, presumably because of war conditions.

Willkie to Attend The Gridiron Dinner

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—Wendell Willkie announced tonight he would leave by private plane tomorrow to resume his Florida vacation, stopping at Charleston, S. C., to visit friends. He returned to New York to make a speech last Friday.

Willkie plans to remain in Florida until December 14, when he will journey to Washington for an appearance at the Gridiron dinner.

Alien Youth Registry Rule Is Explained

Parents Must Sign For All Under 14, Harrison Declares

Due to misunderstandings in regard to registration of alien children under the age of 14, Earl G. Harrison, director of alien registration, yesterday announced "that all alien children," whether permanently or temporarily domiciled in the United States, and whether they are refugees or otherwise, "must be registered by their parent or legal guardian."

Upon reaching the age of 14, they must appear in person at the postoffice, within a period of 30 days, and be registered and fingerprinted.

The first estimate made by the Justice Department of 3,000,000 aliens residing in this country may prove to be too low, it was stated. This figure was arrived at on the basis of the 1930 census, in conjunction with statistical data supplied by the Immigration and Naturalization Service and other sources. A total of 4,000,000 may be reached before the remaining four weeks left to register are over, it was reported.

"It was little more than careful guessing," Harrison said of the original estimate.

Aliens must notify the postoffice of any change of permanent residence within a period of five days after it is made, he stated.

Airport Designers Coin New Lingo

By Edward Ryan

When they start building a new airport, the Government's planners leave nothing to chance, or for that matter, to tradition.

They've already knocked the Potomac River out of the way to build a square mile or more of new airfield at Gravelly Point.

Now, it was learned, they are preparing to do the same thing, in effect, with various portions of the English language, all for the sake of an interior decoration scheme that will capture the "spirit of aviation."

Designers at Work

To do this, the Government's procurement division has had its own designers working for weeks, mixing blueprints, little squares of colored cloth, and assorted chunks of metal into a decoration plan that is intended to make the inside of the new airport terminal as up-to-date as the landing field.

Here are some of the things they have decided:

A love-seat isn't going to be a love-seat when it gets into the new Gravelly Point terminal. It will be a "two-passenger davenport," and the same phrase goes for "three- and four-passenger davenports."

They have designs for all three types, also their own designs for the airport chairs. A chair, however, will still be called a "chair."

The rug in one of the terminal lounges will be a color usually called powder blue. In the airport, its color will be "horizon blue."

The general color scheme has been chosen to harmonize with the floor, which will be green and black terazzo. From this starting point, the designers have picked a combination of light green, gray and coral for the two-to-four passenger davenports. The framework of these will be either stainless steel or aluminum, whichever is found to be least expensive.

Most of the passenger equipment for the terminal will be used in the waiting room, a long curving hall with high windows facing out toward the airfield. This arrangement influenced the furniture designs—the chairs and davenports nearest the windows will have low backs, those behind will be higher. As a result, those who sit in the second row will be able to see over those in front, and everyone will be given a clear view of the landing field.

Separate Plan

The Government-designed furniture for this room will include six two-passenger sofas, six three-passenger jobs, 47 four-passenger davenports, 10 large over-stuffed davenports, 28 tables, and four writing desks.

The designers have worked out a separate plan for the President's room in the terminal, which is set apart for receiving visiting dignitaries. Here they will use a green rug, green draperies, and the chairs will be covered in henna-colored leather. Also in the President's room will be a large cabinet, with refrigeration in each end.

In charge of the interior decoration plans are Mortimer Clark, who turned from research in Egyptology to the Government service, and his assistant, E. Melvin Klein, whose job is to be a combined architect, draftsman, furniture designer, and interior decorator.

Clark picked the designs, Klein worked them out.

Rising Prices Seen In Husband Mart

The women folk, always seeking equality with men, soon may achieve it numerically.

The Census Bureau reported Saturday that the excess of males over females in the United States—which reached a peak of 2,692,288 in 1910—was being reduced at a rate of about 1,000,000 a year. If the rate is unchanged, the number of each sex will be about equal by 1945.

About 105 males are born for every 100 female births, but, the bureau explained, women now live an average of three years longer than men.

Walter-Logan Bill Action Due Today

Both Parties Urge Members to Attend For Vote in House

House members summoned back to Washington for the test are expected today to settle the issue of sending the Walter-Logan Bill to the White House in its Senate-approved form—there to meet an almost certain veto.

Supporters of the measure, which is frowned on by the Administration, were blocked Thursday by Representative Cochran (Democrat), of Missouri, when they sought House agreement to Senate changes in the bill, in order to get it to the President's desk. Both sides in the controversy immediately sent out notices to members, urging them to be present today for an "important vote."

The bill would provide court checks on administrative agencies in the New Deal.

Some of its most ardent advocates have threatened to invoke powers to compel attendance of members if necessary to obtain a vote.

However, Representative Michener (Republican), of Michigan, who frequently looks after minority organization matters when Republican Leader Martin, of Massachusetts, is away from the Capital, discounted the need for such action. Michener predicted that most Republicans and many Democrats would be present for today's vote and that the Senate amendments would be accepted.

The House is under agreement to recess until Thursday at the end of today's session.

Even should the Walter-Logan bill be sent to the White House today, the President's expected departure for a two-week cruise in the Caribbean would prevent any executive action on the measure in the next fortnight.

Meanwhile, the issues of financial aid to Britain and legislative curbs on strikes in defense industries continued to be the liveliest topics of contention on Capitol Hill.

Half of Nation Backs Present School Outlay

Fifth Favor Greater Expenditure, Seventh, Less, Poll Indicates

Approximately one-half of the American people believe that the amount of tax money now being spent for schools is "about right," while one-fifth of the population say not enough is being expended. Only one-seventh think the schools receive too large an outlay of the public income.

This was stated by the National Education Association yesterday as the finding of a nation-wide poll conducted by the association, in cooperation with Dr. George Gallup's American Institute of Public Opinion.

Adults in Southern States, it continued, "are relatively more certain than those in other areas that not enough is being spent" on schools. Only one-fifth of the total population has no opinion on the question of educational expenditures, it said.

Persons who have attended college are the most emphatic group in maintaining that more money should be spent on schools, the report said. Those who attended high school only contained the highest percentage who oppose the present allotment of taxes for education.

"In general, older people are inclined to feel that too much is being spent on schools today; the younger people more critical of small allocations for education," the report of the N. E. A. shows.

"Interestingly enough, it is not the people in the South who stress the relative differences in educational standards. The persons most inclined to agree that some States cannot afford as good schools as others live in the West, where schools are better supported than in the South.

"In general, it is not those directly affected by the poverty of certain States, the poorly educated, or the economically insecure who are acutely aware of State differences, but rather the wealthier and more fortunate citizens in other regions."

Benefit Yule Toy Shop Opens Tomorrow

It will be operated by volunteer workers from the Service Guild of Washington.

Pulpits Back Plea for War Relief Funds

Local Protestant clergymen yesterday urged churchmen's support of the united appeal for war relief work in Asia and Europe.

At Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, 1410 Columbia Road Northwest, Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, pastor, conducting the Adult Class, read a telegram from Boynton Merrill, chairman of the Congregation Committee for Assistance to War Victims, which stated:

"Sixty of our churches bombed in England. Will children of your church help us raise a special pre-Christmas goodwill offering to provide cheer for English congregational children without a church or home this holiday season?"

Dr. Buschmeyer is cochairman of the Washington Committee on Foreign Relief Appeals in Churches, sponsored by the Federation of Churches, which this week is presenting the needs of nine different relief agencies in a single appeal. Donations may be sent either to denominational headquarters or handled by the appeals committee, if requested.

Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden, president of the Washington Federation of Churches and First Baptist pastor, and Dr. Buschmeyer will give five-minute talks tomorrow and Thursday, respectively, at 9:15 a. m. over WRC in behalf of the appeal.

British Mission May Be Queried By Congress

Legislators Headed Toward Controversy Over English Loans

By the Associated Press

Congress, headed for controversy over the question of making loans to Britain, may get first hand information on the state of England's coffers from a British finance mission.

The mission, this Capital heard yesterday, is being formed for the purpose of finding out precisely the extent of British holdings in the United States. Legislators concerned with the question of British aid expressed interest in the reported organization of the mission, and some indicated a desire to talk with its members.

Chairman George (Democrat), of Georgia, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, explaining that he had no direct word yet about the mission, said he assumed its members might "want to talk directly or indirectly, perhaps through the State Department," with members of the law-making branch of the Government.

Capper Calls for Facts

Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, said that "I think we want to get all the information we can, all the facts, before taking any action" toward amending the Johnson and neutrality acts. These two laws now bar financial aid to England.

Considerable sentiment for England to sell the United States some of her insular possessions in this hemisphere before asking loans and additional war aid is in evidence.

Some Senators said these demands might form the central theme for opposition to amendment of the Johnson and Neutrality Acts.

Ellender in Opposition

Senator Capper said England should sell some of her "real estate in the West Indies" that would be of "great strategic value" to the United States in protecting the Panama Canal. He mentioned the Bahamas, Barbados and Trinidad among other places.

Senator Ellender (Democrat), of Louisiana, usually an Administration follower, said he would oppose loans to England "unless they accompanied a declaration of war because that is what they would mean."

"We have our defenses to take care of and an acquisition of some of the British islands in this hemisphere should be part of that program," Ellender said.

Bishop Freeman Asks Reawakening Of Love for Christ

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, yesterday called for a reawakening of the personal devotion of men and women to Christ, "if the nation is to show the world the worth of Christianity."

"Young men in training camps will ask what kind of a civilization we are to defend," he said at the Washington Cathedral Evensong rites. "If Christ is not in our industrial life, our social life and our political life, America will perish."

"Religion must be the motivating force of civilization if we are to save this nation and the rest of the world," he concluded.

Nazis Report 70 Fires Left In Southampton

Port's Connections With London Cut Off, Germans Declare

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Dec. 1.—The British port of Southampton again was singled out tonight for violent aerial attacks by the German air force, DNB, official German news agency, reported.

Since nightfall, squadrons of German airplanes have been bombarding harbor facilities, drydocks, industrial plants and other war-essential objects with bombs of every caliber, the agency said.

It added that rail connection between Southampton and London was interrupted. The German air force gave Southampton a heavy bombing last night and early today.

Other bomber detachments were en route to London, DNB said, to "continue the work of destruction" against British supply lines.

It was said the weather favored the German actions. The sky was partly covered with clouds, facilitating the raiders' approach and permitting enough visibility for aiming.

The high command, stressing naval action in its daily communique—including a report that one Nazi "auxiliary cruiser overseas" has sunk 79,000 tons of merchant shipping "so far"—said merely that the Luftwaffe had made "a large scale attack on a vital harbor on the Channel coast."

DNB, however, identified the bombed city as Southampton and said Nazi fliers returning Saturday night counted 70 fires, including 20 large ones, after what it called "one of the most effective attacks of recent days."

The bombers emptied their racks unhampered by British fighter planes, according to the high command.

Air force leaders, however, reported numerous clashes between individual planes over southern England in today's air operations. Early evening reports listed 13 British planes shot down and two German craft missing.

There were reports of three successful naval operations against the British:

1. The high command's report that a surface raider has sunk 79,000 tons of shipping not including "successes as a result of the cruiser's mine-laying activity."

2. Its assertion that British speedboats hit but failed to sink a German steamer at the mouth of the Scheldt River, o ffthe coast of Holland, with three of the little raiders damaged—two probably fatally—in the attempt.

3. DNB's report that damage to the British navy in the Channel battle of destroyers reported Friday by the high command appears to be heavier than the previous claim of two destroyers torpedoed and four merchantmen sunk.

(The latter two are disputed by the British. According to their version, torpedo boats Sunday morning damaged a large German supply ship off the Scheldt and came off unscathed except for slight damage and two casualties on one of the "mosquito" warships. It has admitted damage only to H. M. S. Javelin" in the destroyer battle.)

British Take 22 Off Brazil Ship

By the Associated Press

Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 1.—A British auxiliary cruiser was reported tonight to have halted the Brazilian coastal passenger ship, Itape, 12 miles off Brazil early today and removed 22 passengers whom the British called Germans.

It was reported the captain of the Itape protested to the British captain, declaring the vessel was well within the American neutrality zone and was making a costal run.

The passengers removed with their baggage were understood to have embarked at Porto Alegre, Santos and Rio de Janeiro for Bahia and Belem.

The 4,970-ton ship left Rio de Janeiro yesterday and was reported halted off Cape Saothome. It was understood to have arrived in Victoria today.

Nazi Freighter Silent After Urgent Calls

Miami, Fla., Dec. 1 (AP).—Urgent radio calls from the German freighter Rhein, which slipped out of Tampico Friday, to a Mexican station at Merida, Yucatan, remained unexplained today after a day of silence by the vessel.

Tropical Radio said no calls from the ship had been heard since 12:45 a. m. (E. S. T.).

For more than four hours previous to that time, several commercial stations in this area heard continuous calls from the Rhein, broadcast to "all stations" for relay to Merida. The vessel repeated constantly, "have a message."

Tropical also heard a remark from an unidentified station that "Rhein being followed by warships." The operatoor was unable to say whether the information was authentic or merely a guess.

Calls similar to those broadcast by the Rhein were heard, Tropical reported, when four vessels made a dash for the sea from Tampico two weeks ago. One, the Phrygia, was scuttled when mysterious warships were sighted and the others went back to port.

Dr. A. E. Barrows, Pastor-Emeritus, Speaks at Church

Highlights of his 28 years' pastorate at Eastern Presbyterian Church were described last night by Dr. Alfred E. Barrows, pastor-emeritus, as the congregation started a series of Sunday night fellowship meetings.

Speaking in the church at Sixth Street and Maryland Avenue Northeast, Dr. Barrows cited 1915 as one of the most significent years in the church's history.

William Jennings Bryan, then Secretary of State under President Wilson, addressed the fortieth anniversary service that year, when the $40,000 mortgage was burned, he recalled.

Last night's program, called "Old Timers' Night," and led by the Rev. William Nesbit Vincent, present pastor, was climaxed with a fellowship tea and get-acquainted hour. The Senior Christian Endeavor Society was host. "Youth Night" will be observed next Sunday.

Use Tractors, Save on Feed, British Urged

Special Dispatch to The Post

Dearborn, Mich., Dec. 1.—By replacing her million and more agricultural horses with tractors, Great Britain can free land for agriculture which would feed 4,250,000 people and can, in the event of a long war, make the British virtually independent of outside food assistance, according to Harry Ferguson, agricultural authority.

Other results, he said, would be to free for other purposes ocean freighters now used for transportation of food; to make available from two to three hundred million pounds annually for the purchase of armaments; to increase home-produced meats or dairy products, and release for other national defense duties about 200,000 men now working on farms with horses.

In the World Ward, Ferguson was closely associated with the Department of Agriculture of Ireland and has been in close touch with current problems in Britain.

"In the British Isles," said Ferguson, "there are approximately 1,051,000 horses on farms. It requires the produce of about 5 acres of the best land to feed one horse—equalling about 5,250,000 acres in all."

He pointed to the increased availability of English ships, should tractors replace horses, in a statement "there would be a saving of nearly 2,000 ships now used for carrying foodstuffs. These ships could be utilized for the carrying of war materials from America to Britain.

"It would require only the use of some 40 ships of 10,000-ton carrying capacity with which to transport 300,000 tractors to Britain. Of course this would mean using these ships for this purpose only, but, in the long run, the saving in shipping to Britain would be immense."

By utilizing the land now feeding horses, and bringing new land under cultivation, Ferguson asserted, Britan could save annually between two and thre hundred million pounds sterling which is now leaving that country to buy foodstuffs, largely from her dominions and colonies.

Ferguson added that five acres of land (necessary to feed one hore) will maintain two cows or three head of young cattle. If the horse is eliminated from British agriculture, an additional 2,102,000 cows could be maintained and the milk and butter production of the country could be raised 44.4 per cent. Or the home-produced supplies of meat can be expanded by 90 per cent. The majority of Britain's dairy products, ham and bacon, previously came from Norway, Denmark and Sweden.

Principal crops of wheat, barley, oats, potatoes and turnips in the British Isles total almost 32,000,000 tons annually. By adding for tillage the areas now used for feeding horses, the tonnage of these principal crops could be increased by more than 20,000,000, or 63.5 per cent.

Ferguson added that, in his opinion, through the use of tractors in previously untilled areas, and by the tillage of additional acreage which could be made available through the use of tractors, Britain can maintain food for the whole of her population, if this be a long war.

Ringside Table

With Mary Harris

GOODBY, BEN—HELLO, BOB! Here's good news and bad news in the same package. Ben Young and his clever orchestra will wind up in the Carlton's Cosmos Room next Thursday night. That's Washington's loss. BUT, on Friday evening the Cosmos will present a splendid new all-Washington band headed by that up-and-coming young maestro, Bob Simpson, whom you've heard regularly over the air waves as star saxophonist and singer of the N. B. C. studio orchestra.

Bob's new dance band will feature a "sing section" of the type that's making such a hit on the West Coast. The vocalists will be an integral part of the orchestra as much as the brass and reed sections. It's a new idea in dance rhythem, promises to sweep the country. The band numbers an even dozen, including Leader Simpson, eight top N. B. C. instrumentalists, the Grace Shannon Trio ("sing section") and, very importantly, lovely Linda Carroll as star vocalist. The Carlton's Manager Frank Swadley, a connoisseur of dance music, has been looking around for months for a genuine novelty in bands. Washington's own Bob Simpson and his crew are the answer.

Today's five-star event will be the Mayfair opening of Paual Kain's new diversion crew with singer Adele Van. For this top-bracket outfit we predict a rousing and tremendous hit. Their novelties smack of a musical circus and Paul is up to every trick of brilliant musical arrangement. "Mousey" Garner will be there to greet Paaul, threatens to make a speech.

"HERTHQUAKE" COMING. Milt Herth, chief "boogie-woogie" man of them all, will bring his trio back to the Neptune Room next Monday, December 9, as he promised when he was at the Earle Theater a few weeks ago. The Herthquakers are now finishing a record run of three weeks at New York's Roxy Theater. Milt writes that he'll be looking for a girl singer when he arrives in Washington. You singing lasses are hereby invited to leave applications to warble with the Herth Trio both in Neptune and on vaudeville tours . . . Gen e Archer will remain on with the Herthians, but Evalyn Tyner's many fans had better scurry down to see her. For next week she'll be doing pianistics at Tampa Terrace, Fla. Just a few days more, too, for the croony-tuny-loony antics of the Four Men of Note with comical "Nobby" Baney.

EVELYN KNIGHT,
whose voice is as nice as her face. She returns to the King Cole Room tonight after a six-month absence

"THE HANDS HAVE IT" at the Shoreham this week. Grace Drysdale will present "Dancing Hands" wherein she dresses up her pinkies as tiny dancers. No end cute. There'll also be Hal Cummings, rich-voiced barytone. St. Clair and Day will go into their last week with a blazing samba.

BEAUTIFUL FOOD. Masterpieces of cuisine will be displayed in the Mayflower's Chinese Room tomorrow by the Madrillon, Pouget's, Harvey's Pomona, Earle, O'Donnell's, Garden T. Shoppe, Tallyho Inn and other restaurants. A committee of judges will award prizes from Washington's Epicurean Club. The public is invited to view these culinary wonders. We can't tell you much about the exhibits except that they're all spectacular and Madrillon has concocted some marvelous Pan-American dishes that look like sunset over Rio. The exhibit is sponsored by the Washington Restaurant Association.

Bert Stevens and his mucho popular trio will close at the Cafe Caprice on Wednesday, be followed on Thursday by a new unit from Manhattan.

CIRO'S CIRCUS. Opening of Ciro's Famous Village was a five-ring party. "Mayor" Ciro played his French horn, personally greeted all hands. Emcee Harold Levy read scores of congratulatory telegrams. Harry Baker, headman of the Wilson Line, broke down and got up and did card tricks. Dentist Edmond Bottazzi sang and whistled so handsomely that we thought he was a professional entertainer. Soprano Mary Pierson was encored to a fare-you-well. There was a big group of fine professional talent, too, headed by Dare and Carson and dainty Ariel, singer-dancer. Was the party a success? Believe you me, it was wonderful! On the sidelines we saw Marty Gallagher, beautician Emile, publicist Harry Hooley, restaurateurs Burt Lopatin and Jimmy Flakas, many other notables.

Casino Royal's new show opening today will include Jack Lane's trained canaries, the sword-dancing Barclays and a big cluster of the beauteous Virginia Manch Girls.

MELODY WITH "BOUNCE." "The Redskin Song" when Robin Hood's Dee Tracy gives it a real war whoop (with a feather in her hair) . . . "Kosher Swing" when Bill Strickland's Lotus orchestra swings high this creation of their own Drummer Jimmy Bright . . . And you haven't heard "One o'Clock Jump" at all unless you've heard it done by Sonny James' band in the Metronome Room . . . "While the Music Plays On" as torched by Rae Marsh in Paul Young's Romany . . . "You'll Find Out" when the Anchor Room's Eileen George gives it that certain something.

QUICKIES. That wonderful light in the sky at Fourteenth and H Streets is the new sign on Burt's Trans-Lux . . . Paul Inbody, of the Rainbow Room band, always goes straight home from work because he has to get up "early," meaning 11 a. m., for his Catholic University classes . . . After Steve Evans finishes his Del Rio impersonation of the Hunchback of Notre Dame there's always a great rush of orders for double Scotches . . . The husband of Hi Hat's Carmela Lazari is an accordion teacher. But he isn't teaching it to Carmela, who says that an accordion is to heavy for her to carry around . . . Owners Conrad Siebold and Fritz Miller, of the New Bavarian, are thinking hard about taking a Southern vacation around Christmas.

TASTE TEMPTERS. L'Escargot (and its La Salle Versailles) lives up to its name by having snails Bourguignonne for its specialty. They'll remind you of oysters, except that they're better . . . Genuine Smithfield ham from Virginia's most aristocratic porkers is one of the culinary prides of the Silver Fox . . . The snack specialties at the Harrington Tavern are a perfect light supper for after the theater.

Jewish Groups Act To Aid Service Men

Joins Other Faiths to Provide Recreation, Spiritual Guidance

A comprehensive program to aid Uncle Sam in the growing task of maintaining high morale and stimulating the spiritual life of soldiers and sailors was laid before representatives of Jewish welfare agencies from five States and the District here yesterday.

One of the most important moves of the program, formation of a committee to coordinate the Army and Navy activities of several Jewish, Catholic and nondenominational organizations, already has been taken, it was announced at the meeting by Frank L. Weil, president of the National Jewish Welfare Board.

He told the nearly 300 delegates to the thirty-first annual convention of the Pennsylvania Middle Atlantic Federation of Y. M.-Y. W. H. A.'s and kindred associations at the Jewish Community Center that the coordinating group has been named the National United Welfare Committee for Defense.

It is composed of representatives of the Jewish Welfare Board, the Y. M. and Y. W. H. A.'s, the Salvation Army and the Catholic Community Service, Weil said.

"Dynamic Democracy"

The committee's duty, he said, will be "to create a dynamic democracy and positive religion" by providing recreation, spiritual opportunities and companionship for soldiers and sailors on brief leave from ships or camps in various communities.

Capt. Robert D. Workman, chief of Navy chaplains, told the convention recent increases of recreational and spiritual services by the Army and Navy themselves had resulted in a public belief that activities of such organizations as the Y. M. H. A. and the Y. M. C. A. were no longer needed.

He described the reaction as a public misconception and said there was much the organizations could do in communities frequented by service men while not actually on duty. If the task is not done by these groups, he said, it will have to be turned over to Government agencies such as the WPA. "Government agencies cannot look after the spiritual values necessary for morale," he said.

His stand was backed up by Capt. Harry A. Badt, Navy director of enlisted personnel, who said the Navy was well able to discipline its men while they were aboard ship. It is when they go ashore that the difficulty arises, he declared.

Maj. George W. Hinman, of the Adjutant General's Office's morale division, said the value of morale could not be overemphasized. The Finnish and Greek resistance to agression, he said, proved that morale was of more value than machines, even in this day of mechanized warfare.

Moritz M. Gottlieb, of Washington, chairman of the federation's Army and Navy committee, called on the delegates for "wartime enthusiasm" in accomplishing "a wartime task in peacetime." He pledged the active cooperation of all Jewish organizations of Washington in the Army-Navy welfare work. He said a committee of 50 had been organized here to direct the activities.

Warns of Budget Cuts

Warning against the "temptation" of Jewish welfare agencies to cut budgets and reduce essential services, Louis Kraft, executive director of the National Jewish Welfare Board, told the convention to "continue to create the opportunity for youth to live and practice democracy."

Another speaker was Miss Harriet Elliott, consumer problems member of the Advisory Defense Commission, who gave an off-the-record talk on activities of the Defense Council. She spoke of the progress of the national defense program as "a miracle."

The federation adopted a constitutional amendment changing its name to the Middle Atlantic Section of the Jewish Welfare Board. The Jewish Welfare Board is the parent organization of the groups represented by the delegates from Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and the District.

Rock Falls Slow Search for 19 Others Trapped at Cadiz, Ohio

By the Associated Press

Cadiz, Ohio, Dec. 1.—Rescue workers located 30 shattered bodies deep in the Nelms mine today after two days digging into debris-filled shafts to reach 19 others trapped by an explosion. One body was removed yesterday.

Rock falls and occasional gas pockets made progress slow in the workings 1,500 feet from the entrance of the Ohio and Pennsylvania Coal Co.'s property.

Only 23 bodies were identified. Rescue crews reported that identification of other bodies was proving difficult because of their battered condition. All apparently died at their posts from the force of the blast.

While State and company officials declined to express opinions as to the cause of the explosion Friday afternon, officials of the United Mine Workers Union blamed it on gas.

John Owens, Ohio District U. M. W. president, said the blast "could have been prevented if we had adequate inspection and regulation of mines." A bill providing Federal inspection now is before the national House of Representatives.

National U. M. W. President John L. Lewis told Owens in a telegram that "with this latest explosion as an object lesson, we shall renew our efforts to secure the enactment" of the legislation.

Columbia Drops ASCAP Songs In Showdown of Music War

Network Bars From 'Sustaining' Programs Tunes Controlled by Composers' Union In Battle Over Boost in Copyright Fees

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 1.—Radio's "Battle of Music"—in which America's listening millions are the innocent bystanders—reached a showdown today.

It came as the Columbia Broadcasting System put into effect a new policy barring from its "sustaining" or non-commercial programs all tunes controlled by "ASCAP," the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The C.B.S. action immediately eliminated from unsponsored network programs over 126 of the Nation's 800 radio stations the playing of any tune by Irving Berlin, Cole Porter, Victor Herbert, George Gershwin, Jerome Kern, or any other member of ASCAP, living or dead.

Its new policy put C.B.S. in the position of taking the initiative in a musical price war between the National Association of Broadcasters and ASCAP, which controls the copyrights on approximately 90 per cent of the music played in this country.

It also increased the threat of a "music strike" on January 1 which would ban the tunes of most of the presently popular composers from all national network programs, commercial as well as sustaining.

At issue were dollars—some 8,000,000 of them—not temperament.

On December 31 the five-year contract between station owners and ASCAP expires. ASCAP wants to raise the ante in new contracts.

The money is distributed by ASCAP, a nonprofit organization, to its members according to the popularity of their songs.

The broadcasters, who have set up a rival stable of composers under the name of Broadcast Music, Inc., assert that ASCAP, under its new contract, would double the $4,142,000 income it enjoyed from radio stations in 1939.

ASCAP's rejoinder is that the new contract will reduce the music costs to individual stations and make the networks pay a share for the first time.

ASCAP officials say that even if the chains—N. B. C., C. B. S. and M. B. S.—fail to sign the new contract, ASCAP music will be heard over scores of individual statoins which have met the terms. Contracts also have been signed with Elliott Roosevelt's Texas network and the Warner Brothers Pictures stations.

Survivors Tell Of Ship Disaster

St. John's, Newfoundland, Dec. 1 (AP).—Seventeen survivors of the storm-wrecked Canadian freighter Lisieux, brought here today, reported 10 others had been lost when the ship sank off Newfoundland last week, and two more died in a lifeboat awaiting rescue. The Lisieux had foundered in a storm about 125 miles southwest of Cape Race.

2 Needy Families Face Dreary Yule

and the family must move, where—they do not know.

Even in this discouraging situation, the young couple have kept their hope high. Mr. M. is learning a new trade as shoemaker, and in two months he will be ready to go to work. Mrs. M. is expecting a new baby in May. "If we can just find a way to get along for these next few months, we will be able to take care of ourselves," she says hopefully.

But help must come soon. And that is where the Christmas spirit of The Post's readers can come in, to set a family on its feet again.

With $85 the family can be reestablished in a home. This amount will pay the rent for the next two months, will provide warm clothing for the children and the more nourishing food that the family needs.

Family certified and help administered by Catholic Charities. Amount needed: $85.

Family No. 2

Mr. and Mrs. D. have fought an uphill fight against illness for many months. First Mr. D. began to feel dizzy and sluggish. His feet would swell, and he could scarcely stand over the ironing board in the hot laundry. Then one day he collapsed. At the hospital the doctor said it was diabetic coma.

Insulin, together with other treatments, put Mr. D. back on his feet, so he was able to continue to work three or four days a week, whenever work was available. But his insulin cost $1.85 a week, and he was able to earn only $10 to $12 a week, hardly enough to support a wife and four children, John, 12; Dorothy, 10; May, 9, and Randolph, 6.

But the family managed to struggle along without help as long as Mrs. D. could work. This fall, however, she had to give up her part-time job as a waitress, to go to the hospital for a tumor operation. She is back home now, but still too weak to look for a job for some weeks.

Recently, in order to save carfare, Mr. D. has been walking to work. This additional strain, plus lack of sufficient food, has aggravated his condition. The family has lost all insurance. But the rent has been paid up to date, for they have a terror of being evicted and without a home.

If the family is assisted for a few months, until Mrs. D. can return to work and Mr. D. can regain his lost ground, they can carry on.

All the children are in need of clothing, especially shoes, although they've been attending school anyway. With $135, this family could be tided over this difficult period.

Case certified and help administered by Family Service Association. Amount needed: $135.

By contributing to The Post's Christmas fund, readers can give these families not only immediate cheer, but a new start.

Day by day, the situations in the neediest families will be described in The Post. Although immediate contributions are urged, readers who wish to study some of the cases before selecting one to help, may clip and save the daily articles for this purpose.

Each of the 50 neediest families was selected by one of the following five agencies, members of the Council of Social Agencies: Family Service Association, Catholic Charities, Salvation Army, American Legion welfare department, Bureau of Rehabilitation.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

That Premiere Will Be Sponsored by Notables

The NAA Will Underwrite 'Flight Command;' Judy Garland Steps Out as Star on Her Own; This, That and the Other About the Theater

WHEN "FLIGHT COMMAND," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new service picture, has its "hemisphere premiere" on Tuesday, December 17, Pan American Aviation Day, the Washington portion of the program will be sponsored by the National Aeronautic Association, it was announced over the week-end. Gill Robb Wilson, president of the N. A. A. and present head of aviation for the State of New Jersey, and Col. G. de Freest Larner, general manager of the association, have corroborated their sponsorship of the local event.

BELL

Notable aviation figures included in the membership of the N. A. A. are Orville Wright, whose first successful flight is commemorated by Pan American Aviation Day; William P. Redding, Thomas H. Beck, Harry Guggenheim, Henry King, famous motion picture director; Richard C. DuPont, Max C. Fleischmann, C. S. "Casey" Jones, C. C. Thompson, Bernarr Macfadden and Pat McCarren. It is expected that a considerable number of these nationally known air figures, together with several of today's ace commercial and service fliers, will be in the audience when "Flight Command" is run through the sprockets for the first time at Loew's Capitol Theater in a fortnight.

One performance only will be presented that evening, for which tickets are now on sale at the regular scale of prices. Regular showings of the film will begin at the Capitol on December 24, the day before you-know-what.

So now the drama desk is labeled with a brass name plate, mounted on hard wood taken from the old stage of the Earle Theater, trod by so many illustrious stars of the stage, screen and radio. Or didn't you know a new stage had been laid at the Earle? We are indebted to Zone Manager John J. Payette for this appreciated memento of so many pleasant associations. Now, I take it, the next thing will be those new, double glass doors to flank the Earle's new steel box office. Or didn't you know the Earle had a new steel box office?

Come Thursday, Judy Garland will be along in her first starring picture at Loew's Capitol—"Little Nellie Kelly," adapted by M.-G.-M. from the George M. Cohan stage piece. Nice singing, dancing and comedy cast she will have, led by Douglas McPhail, George Murphy and Charlie Winninger, the lad who composes daybreak cantatas on ham-and-egg menus. And coming to RKO-Keith's next is "Little Men," with Elsie, the bovine beauty, supporting Kay Francis and the rest of the principals. Elsie, by the way, doesn't look any funnier in her trick bonnets than a majority of her distaff contemporaries. And 17 quarts to the smile is no mean record, either.

Many long eons ago, when "The Mark of Zorro" was "hot," some one among the better minds sent this department five cockeyed pieces of red pasteboard, to be arranged into a "Z." Hey, don't touch that, I'll get the darned thing yet!

An old-timer, well known to a host of Washingtonians—to flip off a new one—has come back to the races. Corbin Sheild, veteran showman, long associated with local interests as well as the George Mann chain of picture houses on the West Coast, has been appointed to the managership of the Princess Theater by Charlie Olive, managing director of the Kogod-Burka Amusement Co. Corbin's name already is written down in the histories of the Rialto, RKO-Keith's and Central theaters. Welcome home is what I always say.

Courtenay Savage, author, will be present at the world premiere of his play, "Safe Crossing," when it is first presented by the Blackfriars Guild in St. Paul's Auditorium, 1421 V Street Northwest, tomorrow night. The run will continue through Wednesday and Thursday. Heading the cast will be Cleone and Robert Pollard and Nell Fleming, from the professional stage. They will be supported by the foremost of the Blackfriars' resident players.

Dots and Dashes

With Ethel Barrymore in Emlyn Williams' "The Corn Is Green" an overnight sensation in New York, Herman Shumlin, the producer, has his third smash hit in a row . . . With "The Corn Is Green" in New York, "The Male Animal" in the Midwest, and Tallulah Bankhead, in "The Little Foxes," sneaking up on the Pacific Coast, Mr. Shumlin's charades are pretty thoroughly covering the country . . . When the theater group of Notre Dame, out at South Bend, Ind., opens its season on December 12 with Sutton Vane's "Outward Bound," the role of Mr. Prior will be played by John White, 13 Wilson Avenue, Brentwood, Md. . . . And next Sunday night, the Jewish Community Center's Drama Workshop will open its season with Eugene O'Neill's one-acter, "Where the Cross Is Made," and George Kelly's comedy, "The Flattering Word" . . . Shades of Williams & Walker, Cole & Johnson, Sissle & Blake and other stars of the Negro musical comedy world will hover over Northeast Washington the night of December 6, when the New Faces Guild, a group of local amateurs, will present its first original musical extravaganza for the benefit of the Empty Stocking Fund for Washington's handicapped colored children . . . Ethel Barrymore Colt arrived in town Saturday to assume the lead in "D. C. Melody" and already is up to her eyes in rehearsal . . . In case you missed them the first time around, "Bitter Sweet" will be bobbing up before long at the Columbia, and "The Letter" at the Metropolitan.

PEGGY MORAN, ROBERT CUMMINGS AND LEO CARRILLO in a scene from "One Night in the Tropics," evidently dedicated to the irrational defense program. It opens Thursday on the screen at the Earle Theater

Chaplin Steals Trans-Lux Bill From the War

A group of amazing war shots, in the current week's Trans-Lux program, fail to overcome the dominating interest in the revival of the Chaplin picture, "In the Bank." The film speeded-up to sound and modern presentation is in surprisingly excellent condition and presents the incomparable Charlie in rare form—and how the Chaplin fans do enjoy it!

Getting back to the news pictures, there are some very affecting scenes on the Battle of Britain, heroic firefighters battling immense fires, United States fire chiefs there as observers, and London still bravely carrying on after four months of intensive bombing.

The overflowing news section also carries excellent shots of war action in the Far East, and covers United States defense activities to a completely comforting degree. Labor happenings are recognized in a trio of shots, including the settlement of the Vultee strike.

The Endless Caverns exploration is an item of local interest, and, among the sport events, are the Giants-Redskins and Georgetown-George Washington football games, and Paramount's All-American football selections for 1940.

"This is China" is another excellent short, one of the "best ever" travelogs, and the Disney cartoon, "Mr. Mouse Takes a Trip," is an enjoyable ride for the patrons. A "Screen Snapshots" rounds out an outstanding Trans-Lux bill, notably enlivened by the two comedies.

Gayety

After an absence of several months, Margie Hart, one of burlesque's outstanding luminaries, returns for a week's engagement at the Gayety Theater.

Miss Hart is a personality who gains new favor with each succeeding visit, and, in the current attraction, she is at her best. Wearing an unusual and stunning wardrobe, this dynamic display artiste offers several beauty parades and dances which rank with her most sensational hits.

The current revue serves to introduce Hank Henry and George Lewis, two chaps whose ability in the comedy field is attested by their antics in this latest Hirst offering. With the able assistance of Bob Alda and George Rose, the boys present many new and witty comedy skits which pack a real punch.

Aside from the impudent Miss Hart, the distaff side of the bill boasts such sumptuous sirens as Leona Lewis, Marion Wakefield, Elenore Samuels and Gypsy Nina. Miss Wakefield proves to be an exceptionally clever "talking woman" and comedienne.

"Heart Breakers," furthermore, offers two fine entertainers in Walter Green and Rhythm Brown. Green, who recently closed with the Cotton Club Revue, does a nifty tap dance routine, while Brown's musical specialty is no less effective.

SINCLAIR LEWIS is booming Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, as Roosevelt's successor. Lewis visited the Hutchinses in their home and discussed this with Mrs. Hutchins. "Bob is well qualified for the job," he assured her. "With all his experience as a successful administrator he belongs in the White House" . . . "But why should we go there," protested Mrs. Hutchins, "when we already have a swimming pool here?"

JOHN GOLDEN, who is producing "Claudia," lunched at Sardi's and then called for Vincent Sardi, jr. "I need a young, blonde girl for the lead in my new show," the producer confided. "So many young, blonde actresses come in here all the time. I want you to keep your eyes open and find one for the role of Claudia" . . . The young restaurateur seemed incredulous. "But I'm serious," Golden assured him. "You pick her—she must be young, blonde and know how to act" . . . Sardi agreed and began his search. Three days later Golden told him: "Well, Vincent, forget about it. I think I've found the girl" . . . That's wonderful," said the relieved young man. "How'd you ever find her?" . . . "It really wasn't difficult," said Golden. "She's Joan Crawford."

HELEN HAYES, in her first few days of "Twelfth Night," already has experienced the one event which comes to all Shakespeareans. Backstage Wednesday night she accidentally stabbed herself . . . Maurice Evans has made a recording of the beleaguered King's speech in "Richard II," to be broadcast over 250 stations, to aid the Bundles for Britain campaign . . . Reuters is taking over the South American departments of the old Havas news agency. The Nazis had tried to distribute their own news services to Latin America, explaining that Havas now belongs to the German agencies since the fall of France. But they weren't convinced, and Reuters won. The new outlet will be called L. E. F. Reuters—the "L. E. F." for France's "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

DON NELSON and Leon Henderson, of the National Defense Council, Thursday night discussed the council's activities of the day . . . "At the council meetings," they were asked, "which of the members presides?" . . . "That's hard to say," Nelson replied, "inasmuch as we have no chairman" . . . "There must be some one officiating," the questioner persisted. "Some one to call the meeting to order, recognize speakers, etc." . . . "Well, put it this way," Henderson explained. "It's run like a basketball game. The ball is tossed into the air, at the opening—and then everybody scrambles for it."

"DEAR LEONARD," writes Hannen Swaffer, the London columnist, "I'm an old reporter who has seen great events in many countries. But the most amazing of them all, to me, is the quiet of London. People walk about pointing to airplanes battling above. This is our Coney Island of the skies . . . The Empire carries on, although a lot of glass has been smashed. The statue of Abraham Lincoln still faces Westminster. On the other side is a great crater. The bomb which made that blew from the face of Big Ben a tiny piece of enamel, which was picked up by Sir John Reith's chauffeur. It will be a family heirloom. We pity the British people who went away, for missing the greatest adventure in the world.

"WE ARE ALWAYS being told we are going to have a new world after the war. Some people think it will happen automatically. I myself know that you won't have a new world except by a long process of evolution. For after the war there will be such relief and rejoicing and waving of flags, and people will forget a new world altogether. Nobody wants a new world. I live in a flat overlooking Trafalgar Square, in a house built for Mrs. Fitz-Hubert, the morganatic wife of an English king. Around the corner is the Strand, a seventeenth century road jammed with twentieth century traffic. I am told if they build a bridge across the Thames, the Strand traffic would be relieved. But if that bridge were built, my flat would come down. I want the bridge and I want my flat. I want old London and the new, both at once. What man means by a new world really is that he wants a fuller life, which has a different meaning for everybody.

"TO SHOW the change which has taken place in people, take my friend, the Duke of Westminster, the greatest ground-owner in London, with an income of 300,000 pounds sterling a year. He recently has been living in a room at the Savoy, and his chief complaint is that I haven't told the red-head socialist in charge of shelters to make them streamlined so that the bombs slide off . . . A new world . . . 'In the Great Book, with the All-Knowing Pen, this is already written—they died to save all men who died in saving Britain' . . . Cheerio."

JOE KENNEDY brought to the White House a confidential report on Britain's economics. He was startled to discover that the President already had a more thorough report on that subject—from his own Defense Commission.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Pittsburgh, Dec. 1 (INS).—As much as John Crawford loves New York she won't be back there until late spring. M.-G.-M. has two big pictures lined up for her. The first is "A Woman's Face," which starts next week, and today it was announced that she will do "Gilded Lady" immediately following. Clark Gable and Spencer Tracy have been rumored as the male stars but I wouldn't bet any money that either will be in the line-up when Joan starts the picture.

PARSONS

"Gilded Lady" is described as a strong acting role for La Crawford, not unlike "Strange Cargo." It concerns a chorus girl in the days of 1850, who becomes bitter and disillusioned and goes on one of the "girl boats" to Panama. It should ease Mr. Hays' mind to learn that she is quickly reformed through real love.

From New York comes word that Clarence Brown is angling for the late Douglas Fairbanks' complete interest and stock in United Artists Corporation. Confidentially, the only thing holding up the deal is the price, which is plenty steep, I hear. Clarence is one of the richest directors in Hollywood, but up until now he has worked on a big salary basis and never put his own money into his films. However, his contract with M.-G.-M. expires soon—and there's no doubt that he is interested not only in directing his future films, but producing and financing them under such a set-up as United Artists would give him.

Garson Kanin, whose torch for K. Hepburn is lighting the Hollywood sky, is trying to get his mind off the lady, concentrating on his next picture. It's to be "Tom, Dick and Harry," an original by Paul Jarrico and gets under way about the first of the year. Ginger Rogers is to be Kanin's star in this picture and they tell me her "Kitty Foyle" is the best Ginger has ever made.

You can't say Cecil B. De Mille hasn't a sense of humor. Even his staff has been a little bit dubious about mentioning the Eastern reviews on "Northwest Mounted Police" to him. They weren't too glowing. But the other day C. B. walked into his office with all the critiques and sat down and read them with much amusement. His only comment was: "Every time I make a picture the critics' opinion of the American public goes down." He could afford to joke—the picture broke records in New York, Chicago and Boston.

Snapshots of Hollywood at random: Nice to receive wires from my friends who attended the luncheon Joe Schenck gave for Jack Dempsey at Twentieth Century-Fox. Arline Judge (who is with Jack everywhere on the Coast), Darryl Zanuck, Sid Grauman, Jack Oakie, Ty Power and Annabella, Don Ameche, Gene Fowler and all the others; Garbo's so interested in "Comrade X" she asked the publicity department for tickets to the preview. First time on record G. G. has ever done anything like this.

Sorry to miss Errol Flynn in Cleveland. He's meeting Franklin Roosevelt, jr., there and they'll return for the "Santa Fe Trail" premiere together; the Humphrey Bogarts will spend Christmas with Louis Bromfield at his farm; John Shelton's old contract was torn up by M.-G.-M. and he was handed a new one with a raise; good wishes to Chester Morris and Lillian Barker, who were married at Frank Morgan's home; Bill Frawley and Bob Cobb heading for Chicago to get players for the Hollywood stars; Harold Lloyd was at the House of Murphy last night with Ned Day and Hank Moreno—champion bowlers of the world.

Honestly—Mickey Rooney is driving his friends crazy talking about Linda Darnall. Love has really come to Andy Hardy; "Free Man" John Barrymore still prefers brunettes; he's out with a different raven-haired beauty every night; N. Teitelbaum, the furrier, has a life size portrait of Orson Welles wearing the full length sable coat he designed for the boy genius, in his store—and it's autographed.

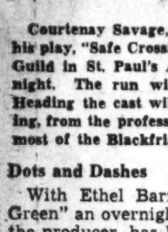
That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

—With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Dec. 1.

Evidently Vivien Leigh has never read the book "How to Win Friends and Influence People." After putting a colored picture of her on the cover of one of our best national magazines, the editor wanted to do a story on "Bundles for Britain," but could get only her maid on the phone, who said, "If you tell me what you want, perhaps Miss Leigh will talk to you." You'd hint both Miss Leigh and Mr. Olivier would want all the friends they could gather together, when the war is over and they return from Britain, they'll undoubtedly want to do more pictures—or will they?



HOPPER

Katharine Hepburn telephoned birthday greetings to Director Garson Kanin, but Carole Lombard sent him a cake made entirely of flowers. Garson's next picture will be "Tom, Dick, and Harry" with Ginger Rogers.

I asked Garson if he was satisfied with the results of "They Knew What They Wanted," he said, "The critics were very good to me. But you never can judge the worth of your own pictures, because you're always in competition with yourself."

With the enormous success of Judy Garland and everyone connected with "Little Nellie Kelly," the story of its producer, Arthur Freed, is very interesting. As you know, he's a famous song writer. Had so much faith in himself that he took a terrific cut in salary to become a producer. I'd call that backing your judgment with your own cash.

Norma Shearer's put George Raft on probation, so you can expect them back together any minute . . . Helen Gilbert, whose divorce was final last week, is expected to marry Freddie Wilcox any minute. Freddie's a brother-in-law of Nick Schenck.

When Jack Barrymore was asked to ride with Santa Claus, he emitted the largest razzberry—then said, "Are you kidding me?" Nevertheless, he rode! Wish you could have seen Charlie McCarthy and Bergen with their escort from March Field. When the parade halted, an officer would take a child from its mother's arms, carry it to Charlie, and he'd discuss Christmas with it, then slyly look up at Bergen as much as to say, "How am I doin'?" During one halt I watched six children thus thrilled.

When Bob Hope passed the store at Hollywood and Vine, he yelled up to a watcher on the fifth floor, "Hey! If you've got some long woolen undies, throw 'em down—I'm freezing!" But the majorettes, who wore practically nothing, didn't seem to mind the wind.

Our own Leo Carrillo was a show stopper. His horse danced in a special searchlight, and around his neck (the horse's—not Leo's) he wore an illuminated electrical martingale.

Now that Gaylord Hauser's returned to town, he and Garbo went Christmas shopping, and the first day out got stuck in an elevator at one of our fanciest department stores. The least embarrassed was Garbo. Wonder if you'll know her with her permanent wave?

At Edgar Bergen's party—"Come as your childhood dream"—you've never seen so many engineers, generals, and Napoleons. But it was Bergen, as usual, who pulled a rabbit out of his coat pocket.

H. G. Wells made the remarkable remark that "'Jerry' (meaning Germany) is finished, but it may take a couple more years for the powers that be to realize it."

U. S. Urged to Unite With Great Britain

Clarence K. Streit Debates 'Union Now' With Quincy Howe

Clarence K. Streit, proponent of an Anglo-American federal union, last night declared that "Union now" could defeat Hitler and end war for all time.

He told an American Forum of the Air audience that "we could do to Adolph I as our 13 States did to George III—form a provisional Congress to win the war and the peace," and he received the reply that his proposal would involve the United States in a war to bring back a system "that was rotten ripe for change when the war came."

The reply came from Quincy Howe, author, editor and radio commentator, who declared that "Federal union means trying to bring back into existence a world that history and Hitler have consigned to the scrap heap."

No Basic Changes

"Federal Union," he added, "does not call for or contemplate basic changes in the internal structures of the democracies. It assumes that we all go along doing business pretty much as usual if the democracies will just get together."

Howe warned that the United States cannot survive "in this revolutionary world" without "making democracy work at home" by eliminating unemployment, promoting Western Hemisphere solidarity and building roads and hospitals as well as tanks and battleships.

Only by extending "democracy into the economic lives of our own people" can the United States aid Britain and China "on a scale that will really mean something," Howe added.

Streit, former New York Times Geneva correspondent, clashed with John B. Trevor, president of the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, who charged that Streit's plan would be undemocratic, since it would not enfranchise 380,000,000 residents of India.

He declared that Streit was "imbued with race prejudice" for holding these vast numbers of people "unfit for representation" in his proposed international congress, which would rule the world just as the Congress of the United States rules this country.

Streit replied that the United States began with many restrictions on democracy, that many men and all women did not have the vote for many years after the American Revolution.

"That does not answer the question," Trevor said. "I asked how you can consider your system democratic if 389,000,000 people cannot vote?"

"The democracy that the United States is practicing and has been practicing is good enough for me," Streit responded, his face reddening.

"Answer the question!" someone in the audience shouted.

But no further answer was made at the time. Later, in answering a questioner who asked whether England or a New York group was financing the "Union Now" movement, Streit declared that all funds have come from members of the organization in every State in the United States, and added:

"We need no English money. There are plenty of Americans who believe in the principles of federation upon which this country is based and want to extent these principles to the whole world."

Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan, lawyer and wartime commander of the Twenty-seventh Division, A. E. F., made a plea for American entrance into the war and union with Britain to protect the United States from Hitler. He said that this country is the "bull's-eye of Hitler's target, not the poverty stricken countries of distracted Europe."

Theodore Granik presided at the forum, which was attended by an overflow audience of 650 in the Willard Hotel, and was heard over a coast-to-coast broadcast.

Watts Named To NLRB Post Replacing Fahy

New General Counsel Has Been With Agency Since 1936

The National Labor Relations Board last night announced appointment of Robert B. Watts as general counsel.

Watts, now assistant general counsel, succeeds Charles Fahy who resigned in September to become assistant solicitor general.

A native of Portland, Me., and a Yale graduate, Watts is 39 years old. He has been with the NLRB since 1934.

Upon passage of the present National Labor Relations Act, he was appointed Associate General Counsel charged with the responsibility under Fahy for all litigation of the board, eventually involving the supervision of about 150 attorneys.

In the 100 injunction cases brought against the board during the first two years of its operations, and in subsequent appearances involving NLRB cases, Watts has argued before every Circuit Court of Appeals in the United States excepting the Tenth Circuit. In addition he has appeared in behalf of the NLRB before the Supreme Court in seven cases, the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Coo., the Newport News Shipbuilding Co., in the Republic Steel mandamus action from the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, the Columbian Stamping & Enameling Co., the Waterman Steamship Co., the National Licorice Co. and the Serrick Corporation.

Alexandria Church Club Reelects Pierce

The new officers will assume their duties at the first 1941 meeting, to be held the fourth Thursday in January.

Addresses Bring to Close Baptist Students' Parley

With Truman Lancaster, who was elected on Saturday night as new president, presiding, closing sessions of the D. C.-Maryland Baptist Student Convention were held last night at National Baptist Memorial Church, Sixteenth and Columbia Road Northwest.

Student speakers discussing the theme of "Follow Thou Me," were Esther Harrington, of Hyattsville High School; John Clark, Washington student at Bucknell University, and Haley Scurlock, of George Washington University.

Addressing services yesterday morning in the church, William Hall Preston, Associate Southwide Baptist student secretary, pleaded for dynamic Christian love in the world today, declaring that kind of love as demonstrated by Jesus would transform the world.

Howard Rees, student secretary of the union, presided.

Officers elected with Truman student at Wilson Teachers' College and active youth leader at North Washington Baptist Church, were Bob Willis, Maryland University, vice president; Doris Graham, American University, recording secretary; Doris Ballard, Hood College, corresponding secretary, and Howard Sorrell, Wilson Teachers, treasurer.

Also June Pyne, of Columbia Junior College, editor of "The Telflash," the Union publication; Eleanor Archer, devotional leader; Miriam Jennings, Baptist Student Magazine representative; Marie Louise Ralph, reporter, and Alma Daugherty, director of Bible discussion groups. The last-named four are from George Washington.

With refreshments in the evening

● It is an idea now recommended by smart hosts and hostesses—a gracious touch of hospitality. When guests drop in simply bring on a tray of dainty sandwiches or other evening refreshments and a bottle of good Port wine. Pour small glassfuls of Port all around—then listen to the compliments that come your way. Try it at your house—next time you have guests.

N. Y. Man, Crew Ran Out of Food Crossing Atlantic

Miami, Fla., Dec. 1 (AP).—The Herald said in a special dispatch from Nassau today that Henry B. Clarke, of Roslyn, N. Y., and a crew of six were without food for the last three days of a stormy 60-day crossing from England in the schooner Marie.

The story quoted Clarke, identified as the owner of English aircraft factories, as saying the schooner was machine-gunned by German planes before sailing. Clarke said the worst experience of the voyage, however, was crossing the German submarine patrol stretching from Brest, France, to Ireland.

Clarke, the Herald said, arranged to sail the schooner when he was unable to reserve passage to the United States before February.

A Dignified Inaugural

Plans for the third inauguration of President Roosevelt January 20, though still in the formative stage, show that those in charge are benefiting by the experience of 1937 and are fully mindful of the needs of 1941. An abbreviated ceremony in Washington, coupled with some country-wide observance to impress the people with their stake in the National effort, is very much in order.

To conserve the President's strength for the tasks at hand, it is especially important to spare him the ordeal of 1937. Through a day of cold rain he carried on with fortitude, riding up Pennsylvania Avenue bareheaded in an hour-and-forty-minute parade. In that first January inaugural strict limits were imposed on the size and time of the procession, but this year Inaugural Chairman Joseph E. Davies properly proposes to reduce the time further. The 8,800 marchers, 690 horsemen and 260 automobiles of 1937 will be replaced by a line diminished as far as possible, though as representative as usual.

Whether the national participation will take the form of radio hook-ups or local celebrations will be discussed by Miss Dorothy Thompson, who is in charge of this section of the preparations, in a meeting here today. Whatever the shape of the scheme, it would be advisable to extend to it the expected simplicity of the swearing-in ceremony. In rites destined to impress the citizens with the need for united effort, the carnival spirit would be out of place.

The Coffee Agreement

The coffee export agreement signed last week by representatives of Latin-American producing countries and the United States is the most important step taken since the Havana conference to give practical effect to plans for strengthening the economic solidarity of this hemisphere. Under the agreement the amounts of coffee that may be shipped to the United States are fixed for each producing country, and export quotas are also set for markets outside the United States. From time to time United States quotas are to be adjusted by the Inter-American Coffee Board provided for in the agreement.

Since European markets for about 10,000,000 bags of coffee have been cut off by the war, huge unsalable surpluses have constantly threatened to disrupt orderly marketing of coffee in the United States. The quota system just established provides an assurance that there will be no mad competitive scramble by the coffee-producing nations of this hemisphere to dispose of these surpluses in the North American market. Of course, such an arrangement provides for Government controlled and restricted trade of a kind that the Department of State has in the past consistently opposed. But abnormal conditions have necessitated resort to methods adapted to the extraordinary needs of the times.

On political as well as economic grounds, the coffee marketing pact is commendable as an emergency device. But it affords no solution for the problem of unsalable surpluses. If the holding of such surpluses is to be financed, as expected, by Export-Import Bank loans, the United States will doubtless be left "holding the bag" for the other parties to the pact. It is entirely feasible and desirable to employ American funds freely to finance trade with the countries of Latin America, provided that such trade is based upon a mutually advantageous exchange of goods. But funds advanced for holding huge unsalable surpluses in storage for indefinitely long periods are funds misspent and probably lost forever to the lender.

The United States has spent hundreds of millions of dollars upon agricultural price-raising experiments. They have been lamentable failures, even when accompanied by production control, as shown by the demoralized state of our cotton market. Our cotton export trade has become a mere trickle, and Government holdings of surplus cotton have reached dizzy figures. The war has aggravated, but it did not create, these conditions. They are the outcome of efforts to defy the law of supply and demand by using public money to take off the market goods that cannot be sold at current prices.

To apply similar price-bolstering methods to the surpluses of Latin-American countries over whose production policies we have no control would be the height of folly. We can well afford to assist orderly marketing, but we cannot afford to throw money away on schemes for holding coffee or other surpluses in storage as a means of supporting prices. The situation calls for drastic measures to readjust production to demand—adjustments that are likely to be postponed at our expense if we are too ready with offers to aid.

Peace, It's Wonderful

Simultaneously on Friday the two Chinas jumped into the news. The Japanese signed a "peace treaty" with the one based at Nanking, and we negotiated a $100,000,000 loan with the other having Chungking as its capital.

The "peace" ceremony marked another scene in the comic opera with which the Japanese intersperse their war making in China. Having been rebuffed in a peace overture to Chiang Kai-shek, the generalissimo in Chungking, they signed up with Wang Ching-wei at Nanking. By this act, which was accompanied by the release of a flock of white doves, Nanking is recognized as the capital of the only national government, and Wang Ching-wei as the head of it.

One would think that Wang had been equally with Generalissimo Chiang at war with Japan. The contrary is, of course, the case. For months past Wang Ching-wei has been established at Nanking as the head of Japan's puppet government in China. Like Mazzini, the adroit Wang is an adept at "masterly inactivity," and he left it to the Japanese to provide him with a country as well as a seat and a littoral. The Japanese have done their best for Mr. Wang. After promising to mop up China in six weeks, they have been sticking to the job—a job so sticky that they have frequently bogged down—for 40 long months.

And then they began for the first time to "recognize" Chiang Kai-shek by throwing out to him an olive branch, if a pretty thorny one. This was a signal change of front on the part of a war maker who had held that only Wang was legitimate. But was the Nanking puppet, who would have lost his raison d'etre if Chiang had come to terms with Japan, hurt? Not at all. When the fighting Chiang refused to parley with the Japanese, and the Japanese then turned back to Wang Ching-wei, the head of the Nanking government proved in no sense either coy or injured. He signed on the dotted line, with a brush, incidentally, that has made him one of the greatest calligraphers of modern China. "Face" doesn't figure among the essential features of a puppet's anatomy.

Thus the Japanese have negotiated a peace with their own creature. And they have signed an end to a war which they have hitherto refused to recognize as anything more belligerent than an "incident." This comic opera was necessitated because of the Japanese need to save their face after the Chiang rebuff. In return for this mark of esteem the egregious Wang undertakes to give full military and economic cooperation to his masters in the exploitation of China.

We prefer the kind of cooperation which our government is giving to the free China based at the far western capital of Chungking under Chiang Kai-shek. Chiang Kai-shek's refusal to fall in with Japan's "new order in Asia" distinctly deserved this recognition at our hands if only because any such partnership would have freed imperial Japan's hands for designs to the south of China which run athwart very definite American interests. The Japanese hand, indeed, seems already to be busy behind the Thai government's war preparations against French Indo-China.

Crucifixion

Perhaps the most horrifying thing about the age of horrors we inhabit is the anesthesia to horror that sooner or later overtakes the best and kindliest of us.

How easily, for example, we have been able to forget the plight of Poland, where one of the most terrible chapters in the long, cruel history of the human race is now being written. A letter smuggled out of Warsaw has been made public by the committee of Polish-American women in New York. This document is a recital of enormities that stun the imagination and paralyze the emotions. And yet the letter merely reiterates the charges of Cardinal Hlond which were broadcast many months ago by the Vatican news agency. The letter tells of men, and even boys, slain or starved or tortured to death in prison, of Polish youths by thousands deported into Germany as slaves, of Polish maidens abducted for purposes of shame, of Polish mothers praying to a God of mercy that their daughters may die. It tells of 3,000,000 Poles who have already perished and of the millions more who are as certainly doomed to extinction. Most tragic of all is the fear of a victory too long delayed, when "Poland may be freed, but there will be no Poles."

Not so difficult to overlook is the orgy of assassinations and gangsterism in Rumania. The veil of censorship isn't so dense in the young Michael's unhappy kingdom, and one may piece together a picture of a reign of terror which, but for recent examples in Soviet Russia and Nazi Germany, would recall the bloody excesses of the Dark Ages. The nature of man, it has been said, is both godlike and bestial. In this Balkan corner he seems to have gone bestial, and at such times strikes out blindly against friend and foe alike, personalizing only a fierce resentment against his living conditions. This is what appears to have succeeded the rampage of the Iron Guardists in their lust for revenge. Perhaps the bitterest commentary on the Rumanian condition is that the Nazis, who originally fostered the Iron Guard movement and who are adept at these horrible purges, seem about to take over Rumania by way of restoring "order." Order, forsooth! Put this footnote from Rumania under the chapter from Poland and you have some idea of "the new order in Europe."

Terrible as all this is to think of, it is less terrible than the thought that the fate of the Poles may be but an earnest of the fate that awaits all the conquered peoples of Europe. Today, in this twentieth century of our Lord, the words "vae victis" have been given a meaning that the pagan Romans, harsh as they were, could scarce have comprehended.

A Finnish Reminder

If a poll were taken of the American people on their favorite country, we have no doubt that Finland would come high on the list, if not highest. The popularity of the Finns anteceded the demonstration of their national quality in the epic defense which they mustered less than a year ago against the Tartar invader. It was born as a result of their spotless debt record. Therefore, the Finnish hope that the terms of their post-war obligation to the United States may be revised, a hope expressed in their acceptance of our invitation to defer payment on their December 15 installment, will arouse nothing but an agreeable response.

The fact is that an overture to Finland to come to the United States and discuss a revision of the outstanding debt has long lain in Helsinki. It went out to the Finns when the Finns alone among the war and post-war debtors persisted in keeping up their payments. However, they haven't been eager hitherto to take advantage of our invitation. And for a good and sufficient reason, viz., that the last time Finland was the first to send over a debt funding mission, she got the least generous terms among America's debtors. This was in 1923, when the Finns' post-war obligations to the United States were funded at the average interest rate of 3.3 per cent. The tardiest debtors were France and Italy, and they were allowed 1.6 per cent and 0.4 per cent respectively, though some of their debt was in the same category as Finland's. In the war and post-war debt negotiations, evidently, it paid to be last.

This was one of the bad features—and there were many—of the war debt settlements. "Capacity to pay" was supposed to be the measuring rod which we applied to our debtors, but everybody knew that we collected only what we could get. The rate charged against Finland would have been a fair rate if these other settlements hadn't offered themselves by way of contrast, especially since the obligation of the Finns, contrary to the general impression, isn't a war debt. What we should now do is assure the Finns that there can be no revision, but only deferment, while she is struggling back on her feet; and that, in the next general revision, if any, she will get most and not worst favored nation treatment.

A Tax Reprieve

Administration assurance that no additional taxation of 1940 incomes is contemplated is a welcome removal of one of the uncertainties on business enterprise. Two tax measures approved at this session of Congress have already been applied retroactively to 1940 incomes of individuals and corporations. As a result, so-called normal corporation taxes now amount to 24% of net income, while the recently enacted excess profits tax imposes additional heavy levies upon corporate earnings.

The incentive to respond to the challenge to produce for defense has already been weakened by burdensome taxes. It would be further impaired if new taxes repeatedly take away the rewards of enterprise as fast as they are earned. From the fiscal viewpoint, moreover, it is shortsighted to apply the tax screws too often and too relentlessly, no matter how great the need for more revenue to cut budgetary deficits. For, if industrial expansion is checked by too heavy taxes, the taxable income of both individuals and corporations suffers, and so do tax receipts. It seems much wiser, therefore, to permit the business upswing now in progress to proceed unhampered for the time being. This will assure a rising national income, a speedier defense system, and automatic increase in tax revenues.

Another argument in favor of nonaction in the matter of taxes is the uncertainty about the rate at which defense funds will be expended. So far this year outlays have been of moderate proportions. They will have to be tremendously accelerated during the remaining months of the current fiscal year to bring actual expenditures up to expectations.

DEATH ON A POLE

Half way across the field
He swings, suspended in the wind and sun
Who, flying, reeled
On air and dropped before the farmer's gun.

Between the fertile rows
He pays his forfeit to a man-made law;
Consider, crows,
The empty beak, the piteous shrunken claw.

Labor And The War

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This Nation should face the fact that unless the airplane aid given to England this winter is upon such a scale as to enable her to successfully resist invasion in the spring most of the supplies sent to her will fall into Germany's hands.

Radical labor leaders are inciting strikes in plane factories. That must stop. It is idle for our Government to indulge in high-sounding platitudes about national defense and spending billions while permitting a handful of men to scuttle the national defense effort by fomenting strikes in vital industries.

I know a young man who has just received notice from his local draft board that he has been placed in class 1. He states that he has a small restaurant business; that he cannot get anyone else to run it who can make it pay, and that he must lose it if drafted. His excuse is probably insufficient and the chances are that he must serve his year in training. Is it any more of an infringement upon the rights of a worker in an airplane factory to say to him that he must not hold up production while the question of whether he is to get 5 cents an hour more is being settled than it is to say to this draftee, "Sorry, son, but your country's safety is at stake; you will have to leave your business and go?"

Mr. Roosevelt will have only half finished his job of providing for national defense if he does not handle this situation without gloves.

"Better Way"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It might be well for those individuals who are so vigorously bent on bringing about a new form of government for America to bear in mind that a new outfit of wearing apparel doesn't always make a better man. (This, of course, doesn't apply to a woman).

It also might be well for them to bear in mind that merely dividing a box of candy equally between little Johnny and Mary doesn't necessarily eliminate the desire on the part of Johnny or Mary to have the whole box. And, after all, isn't it the desire rather than the candy that causes little Johnny and Mary to pull each other's hair?

With this in mind, therefore, why should we have to substitute some unfamiliar form of government to eliminate that desire? Haven't we the best and greatest educational facilities in the world, and haven't we the best background, democracy, to start from? Wouldn't that be a better way to bring about the change than to start clubbing some one around for not seeing the light?

Rail Route

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The most important international rail route in North America is the connection between the City of Chicago and the City of Mexico, the American sectors of which are the rails of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad from Chicago to St. Louis and the rails of the Missouri Pacific from St. Louis to Laredo. Mr. Jesse Jones as head of the R. F. C. has both of these railroads on his hands. Mr. Jones could accomplish something important for the country and the Government if he would press for the consolidation or the operating conjunction of the C. & E. I., the M. P. and the L. & N., which would produce a through route from Chicago over Evansville to Mobile, New Orleans and Pensacola, which potentially is the best rail point for Panama.

The main line of the Southern Railway should be extended from Washington over Vicksburg to Fort Worth and the Southern Pacific should be extended from El Paso over the rails of the Texas & Pacific to meet the Southern at Fort Worth.

The banker's brain thinks of railroads exclusively in terms of capital structure and earning power. The banker cannot see a railroad in terms of roadbed, rails and rolling stock. This is the reason that the Interstate Commerce Commission has not approached the problem of railroad consolidation in terms of new trackage conjunctions for the greater service of the traffic of the country and the Government. Languages and Good Neighbors

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every intelligent American—and that, judging by the millions we spend annually on public education, should include the majority of us—is aware, or ought to be, of the importance of cultivating the friendship of our Spanish-speaking and Portuguese-speaking neighbors. One would expect that every intelligent American with the slightest touch of realism in his mental makeup would likewise immediately think of increased study of Spanish and Portuguese as one of the first steps, certainly an indispensable step, in the development of any program for better understanding between those neighbors and us.

That does not appear to be the case, at least with some of our educational spokesmen, who even in the face of our present international situation seem unable to overcome their opposition—call it prejudice, or ignorance, or stubborn unwillingness to face the facts, or what you will—to the teaching of any foreign language in American schools. This "blind spot" is aptly described by President Henry M. Wriston, of Brown University, as follows:

"It is a paradox more puzzling than any other so far, that as long as the United States was really isolated, with a minimum of international trade, no cables, no telephones, no radios, no steamships, no airplanes, every well-educated man was trained in the foreign languages. Now, with 20,000,000 daily radio listeners, with 10,000,000 more in daily contact with foreign langauges, with all the modes of contact just mentioned, schoolmen insist that foreign languages are not important. They are taught grudgingly, therefore poorly, and then it is declared that the results do not justify them. In a day of 'motivation' the educators provide none, and say it is the fault of someone else. The cold fact, stripped of all wishful thinking, is that the 'common man' has more direct contact with foreign languages today than ever before in history. If education does not see that, it is a blind spot."

An instance of how "grudgingly"—to use President Wriston's term—foreign languages are included in American school programs comes to hand in a pamphlet issued by the Educational Policies Commission of the National Education Association, entitled, "For These Americas."

One might reasonably expect a publication sponsored by a great national educational organization and devoted to "Education for Inter-American Friendship" to say something about the importance of Spanish, Portuguese and French—the languages which, with English, are the dominant languages of "These Americas." Vain expectation! Portuguese, the language of the largest of our sister American republics, is not mentioned at all. Neither is French, the language of one of the most important provinces of Canada (isn't Quebec part of "These Americas"?), of Haiti, and of the French colonies in the New World now so much in the public eye—a language that is still a great cultural instrument, in spite of the temporary eclipse of France as a world power.

The pamphlet does say something about Spanish—to the extent of approximately half a page out of the 15 pages of text! Even this brief mention is "grudging," for of the relatively few lines devoted to the study of Spanish, about one-fifth of the space is wasted in demolishing "straw men" set up by the anonymous author of the pamphlet. I quote the passage in full:

"Merely to teach the mechanics of Spanish in the high school, moreover, is no guarantee of inter-American friendship. Language study which begins with rules of grammar, ends with a discourse on the preterit subjunctive, and goes nowhere in between, is often worth less than nothing for purposes of improving international understanding. Study of the Spanish language in thorough, practical, energetic fashion can be carried on in high schools of the United States in such a manner that inter-American friendship will be vastly strengthened. Many high school students in Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Colorado, Arizona and California need to learn to speak and write and read Spanish as a living, practical, usable tongue. It does not take long for a young person to learn to use a language with considerable facility if the motivation and the opportunity to learn are both present. In too many high school classes in modern languages both of these elements are lacking. The spirit of inter-American friendship, when developed, will furnish the motivation, and the motivation will soon create its own opportunity."

Compare this paragraph with the ungrudging indorsement of the study of Spanish and Portuguese given by Dr. John W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education, in an editorial, entitled, "Language a Basis of International Friendship," published in the July, 1939, issue of School Life, an extract from which follows:

"Throughout the long development of American education it has been natural to regard Europe as our educational neighbors. The scientific and artistic literature of Germany and France has seemed more significant to our scholars than has the literature in other foreign languages. Consequently the principal modern foreign languages, developed in the high schools in this country, have been French and German.

"With the rapid changes taking place in international relationships, the question of what foreign languages are most appropriate for high school study must be examined from a somewhat different point of view. Especially is it true that with the strengthening of pan-Americanism and the vitalizing of our good neighbor policy with Central and South America, Spanish and perhaps Portuguese become exceedingly important. Commercially we need this common medium of exchange of ideas. More significant still, we need it as a means of understanding the aspirations and cultural development of our southern neighbors. Widespread familiarity in this country with the Spanish language and to some extent at least with the Portuguese language is one of the surest ways to build up friendly relations with the countries whose native speech is Spanish or Portuguese."

What a contrast! First of all, note that Dr. Studebaker did not wait for the outbreak of war in Europe and the pressure of the popular demand for "hemisphere defense" to take his position. When he spoke, it had not yet become the "thing to do" to "take up" the cultural and educational aspects of the problems of inter-American solidarity.

One could wish that Dr. Studebaker's attitude were more prevalent among our educators.

The Post Impressionist

Government Girl

I ARRIVE in Washington. I have left the slow, easy-going, dull life of a small Southern town. The work I am offered sounds interesting, the salary seems immense, and living in the Capital of the United States promises excitement.

I enter a boarding house for girls. I agree to take a large room already occupied by three others. I begin unpacking and one of my roommates comes in. She speaks pleasantly, moves about the room quietly, efficiently, definitely, and disappears into the bathroom.

Another roommate comes languidly in. She looks me over with dispassionate interest as she proves that a lounge chair is properly named and the only relief for her too, too weary body. She offers the hope that I will like the place, adding indifferently that if I can stand the food I can stand anything.

A bell rings. The Efficient One dashes in and dresses hurriedly and silently. The Languid One stares out the window. I comb my hair slowly.

The door opens and many packages, surrounded by two small plump arms and topped by a merry, round face, burst into the room. They are scattered on the floor. The Efficient One laughs, the Languid One snorts, and the Merry One (my third roommate) chortles, as she launches into a superlative-filled description of the bargains she has found.

Walking down the stairs the Merry Bargainer prepares me for the horrors of the forthcoming dinner. She reminds me darkly that it is Friday. When I look puzzled, she hisses, "Fish." I laugh and tell her that I like all food. She raises her eyebrows. (I find out later that the three girls tried to ward off every prospective roommate so that they could have the large room for themselves without paying extra rent. I think they were never so right as in using the meals as the weapon.)

After dinner I am awarded the hardest bed, the stickingest bureau drawers, the least space in the closet. The Efficient One washes clothes, the Languid One turns on the radio, the Merry Bargainer entertains the entire house in our room. I learn that everyone is broke, everyone buys bargain clothes, everyone complains about the food, everyone suffers because of the weather, and everyone loathes Washington. My roommates, convinced that I am staying, adopt a studied indifference toward me.

The days pass and I begin to feel like a machine. I find mobs of people pouring factory-like into offices in the morning and out in the afternoon. I am amazed to find so much office jealousy and to find so-called big, intelligent men doing little things to discredit others in order to better their own positions. I work hard, not only because I want to do a good job, but because the work helps me fight the loneliness and strangeness of this new living. I stay bewildered, disillusioned, very tired and sick with unhappiness.

I go shopping only to find that it is the time every other Government clerk is shopping—and there are many of us. Everyone rushes and pushes. Everyone annoys everyone else. The department stores expect everyone to buy the same hat, dress or coat, and obligingly produce it in every color and size. The more exclusive shops are not interested in what I want, but in what "they are wearing." They do not have my size, but will order it. The color I ask for is impossible. I find that ordering a thing is like Christmas—if it ever comes, it is definitely not what I ordered, but it will have to do.

I find it rains inopportunely, unpredictably and often. I never have galoshes, raincoat or umbrella at the proper place and time. I cannot get a taxi. There is not standing room on the buses and trolleys. Traffic is at a standstill. I must walk—a soggy, dripping sponge.

The weeks pass and I learn to rush and push on the street, on trolleys, in stores. I finally become just another one of the girls at the boarding house. I complain with them about the weather and the food and go out to a restaurant with them on "fish night." They tell me Washington is no place for illusions. You must look out for your own interests. Being too kind to others is being a sucker. It will not get you anywhere. I wonder silently where they want to get and what that intangible something is that they struggle for. I laugh with them when the Languid One offers the sardonic consolation, "Well, thank God, we are pure."

The months pass and I take on a certain calmness. I know that here I have found some glorious things. I am awed by the Supreme Court and the Lincoln Memorial. I am amused by the orators in the Congress. I am a delighted Alice in Wonderland in the Bishop's Garden. I like the spring when light green leaves burst onto the trees and give speckled shade around the park where baseball is played in sight of the Washington Monument. I like the fall for there are so many trees to be made more beautiful with autumn colors. I never tire of taking my friends from home sightseeing. I like to pass the embassies and think of the different languages spoken in them. I like to see the Department of State building unchanged, with depth and height and dignity within.

I see one great statesman stand high here in a city chokingly full of the pressure of shrewd and pitiless politics on such vital things. I know that he is honest, fearless, sincere. I keep faith. Since he is, there must be others.

Above all, I like the American people who come from every State and bring their ways of thinking and talking to the center of the Government of their country. I like these people who have made me more tolerant and understanding of a way of living and a world I did not know. I like them for their courage and even for their ruthlessness. They do not fight my battles; they do not ask me to fight theirs. I live here and I am one of them.

I am less intense, less idealistic, less argumentative. I am less confident of my own beliefs—but, even so, I am also less daunted and less dependent. I find I am humbler and quieter, but stronger—much stronger.

Perspective On A Strike

By Ernest Lindley

Vultee Lessons

THE VULTEE STRIKE has left no doubt that public opinion will not tolerate long stoppages of work in vital defense industries due to labor disputes. Bills to curb or prevent strikes are pouring into the Congressional hoppers. Some undoubtedly are inspired only by serious concern for our national defense. Others, considering their origin as well as their content, must be regarded as a renewal of efforts by bitter-end antiunionists to cripple the labor movement, using national defense as a cloak.

The lessons drawn from the Vultee strike by labor experts within the Administration are rather sharply different from those suggested by most of the bills now being introduced. First, the Vultee strike must be put in perspective. It was the first important strike in a defense industry since our big rearmament program was launched and the National Defense Advisory Commission went to work.

In the last five months there have been many disputes, many demands for higher wages, which in ordinary times would have led to strikes. But they have been averted by Sidney Hillman, labor member of the Defense Commission; Isador Lubin, Commissioner of Labor Statistics, Hillman's right-hand man, and their aides. These men have impressed on both employers and union leaders that it is imperative to keep production going and that the side which causes a stoppage is likely to incur public wrath. In this atmosphere, they have been able repeatedly to work our agreements where the principal parties were not only far apart, but stubborn. They have been so successful in the defense industries that the days of work lost through strikes in industry as a whole during the first five months have been many less than in the same periods of 1916 and 1917.

IN COMPOSING DISPUTES, Hillman and Lubin had the help of two unofficial and informal groups. One group consists of experienced union officials, both C. I. O. and A. F. of L., who have used their influence to preserve calm tempers among the union men and officials directly involved in the disputes. The other group consists of prominent industrialists who have had enough experience with labor unions to give good advice to their fellow industrialists with less experience. Behind the scenes, members of both of the groups have given weighty backing to the efforts of Hillman and Lubin to avert strikes.

The success of these informal methods, in which recognition of the national interest, fear of public opinion, good temper and patience, are the main ingredients, requires, however, that Hillman and his aides be brought into the situation before the boiling-over point has been reached. When tempers have got out of hand their task becomes extremely difficult. As a rule, they have been asked to intervene before it was too late for effective work. In the Vultee case, however, they were not called upon until the strike had been declared. They had been watching the negotiations closely, but were informed only a few hours before the strike began that their intervention was not needed or desired, and that there was no immediate danger of a stoppage.

Special influences intensified the difficulty of reaching an agreement at the Vultee plant. The aircraft manufacturers of Southern California appear to have had a gentlemen's understanding to hold the beginning wage at 50 cents an hour, the bottom fixed by the Walsh-Healey Act. Last spring Lockheed raised the floor to 51 cents, but when the union leaders at Vultee asked for 75 cents and the Government conciliator suggested 62½ cents, it was a matter of deep concern to all aircraft manufacturers in the area. The Vultee company had been represented in the negotiations by a lawyer who was also attorney for other employers, locked together in the Lost Angeles Chamber of Commerce. When the Government conciliator refused to deal with him and insisted on talking directly with the company officials, progress on the employer's side became much easier. The company could well afford to pay the wage increase and to make the other concessions finally agreed upon.

ON THE UNION SIDE there was a stiff-neckedness which savored of the Communist influence. Government labor experts privately agree with the assertion of Attorney General Jackson that at least one of the key union officials on the ground should be classified as a fellow-traveler, if not as a full-fledged Communist.

It was noteworthy, also, that the attitude of the left-wing union officials changed when Philip Murray succeeded John L. Lewis as head of the C. I. O. While it looked as if Lewis might be re-elected, they were adamant. After Murray's election they accepted terms somewhat less favorable than they had rejected a few days earlier. Included was an agreement not to strike for 16 months.

The Communist influence may be found again in other disputes, but under Murray's leadership it almost certainly will wane.

Reviewing the Vultee case against the background of successes in averting strikes in many other defense plants, Government labor experts are cool to hasty experiments with legislation. They believe voluntary and informal methods can yield better results, with better feeling and a better protection of rights on all sides, than can be had by resort to compulsion.

All In The Way It's Said

LORD LOTHIAN'S abrupt way of raising the question of financing the British war effort has found little favor with the powers that be. The State and Treasury Departments and the White House appear to feel that when the British Ambassador stepped off the clipper to announce his country would soon need American aid in cash, he was purposely avoiding advance consultation with the proper authorities here. They are proportionally angry.

The tempest now raging behind the scenes of the Administration is hardly more, however, than a teapot typhoon. For while Lord Lothian may have spoken out of turn, there is no complaint against the emissary of the British treasury who will soon arrive in Washington to take up formally the same question informally raised by the British Ambassador.

This man, it is understood, comes at the invitation of Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., who dislikes the stiff modes of ordinary diplomatic intercourse, and always prefers friendly conference with a negotiator directly accredited to him. Every sign suggests he will be given a kindly reception and a fair hearing. Thus the annoyance at Lord Lothian boils down to annoyance that the problem was not handled as the Administration wanted it handled. It is understandable, but not overwhelmingly significant.

THIS IS NOT to say that the emissary of the British treasury will find it easy to extract financial assistance from this country. On the contrary, he will have to surmount serious difficulties and alter tenacious pre-judgments. Lord Lothian's statement on leaving the clipper was only the last of several overtures for credit, and all of them seem to have been made in a way as to create doubt and suspicion here.

During the early stages of the war, at the time of the repeal of the arms embargo, the Anglo-French purchasing commission was directly under the Treasury's wing. Arthur Purvis, the commission's able director, was wise enough to confine himself to the main task, of placing armament orders. Unhappily, one of the British officials working with him took a different line. Appalled by the extent of the expenditures contemplated in the purchasing commission program, he was unable to resist an occasional hint that if the British war effort were to continue, America would eventually have to gain financial aid.

As this official was a member of the British Embassy staff, he started with a disadvantage at the Treasury, where there is a marked distaste for diplomats. He spoke at a time when there was little evidence that the British government was willing to pour the whole national energy into the war effort. And he seems, finally, to have shown a want of tact, dropping his hints persistently despite very visible evidence that they were not welcome. At length Secretary Morgenthau's patience wore so thin that he pretty sharply forbade the matter ever to be mentioned in his presence again, until the British could show tangible proof of the approaching exhaustion of their resources. He added that the British had no reasons for complaint while they could still place orders and pay for deliveries here.

MEANWHILE, the Administration attitude had inevitably crystallized. Because of the surrpunding circumstances, the hints which so annoyed the Treasury were taken as indications of an intention to hornswoggle this country. This doubt and suspicion were originally aroused, not only at the Treasury, but also at the White House and the State Department. Because such feelings existed in high quarters, statistical arguments against giving financial aid to Britain were sought and found, in schedules of potential British assets far more optimistic than any agreed to by the British treasury.

Nor was the incident of the hinting official the last of the sort. During the rest of the winter and the spring, all was calm on the credit front. But in the summer, after the British war effort had begun in desperate earnest, persons connected with the British Embassy again became concerned over their country's ability to pay for its vast purchases here. Being concerned, they discussed the problem, and although they avoided mentioning it to anyone at the Treasury, reports of these discussions were not long in reaching Treasury ears. Doubt and suspicion flared up again immediately.

FINALLY, this fall, the British government became so concerned over the outlook that the Administration was notified the question of financing must be taken up, at the latest, in a couple of months' time. The expedition of the British treasury emissary was arranged on receipt of this notification. American officials, forgetting their suspicion and doubt, prepared to hear the British treasury's case with reasoning calm. On balance it is probably unfortunate that the calm was shattered when Lord Lothian made the issue public before the Administration was ready to do so.

Union Aspects

I WAS SAYING that until about two years ago I was heartily but unintelligently in favor of labor unions and that now I have reservations.

I have learned with regret that the union has developed the aspect of a mob in some of its relations with the community and needs to be brought under the same legal discipline that governs most of us and should control us all. This would benefit the rank and file members as well as nonunion workers and the rest of society. If unions were held responsible for misdoing they could not reasonably complain unless it be argued that a mob has rights of lawlessness. After all, what is a union but a private association of individuals.

Cannot imagine the members of the Union League Club pouring out of their premises to surround a factory and beat up New York policemen as the electricians did recently, but I know that if they should do so our Little Mayor would cause the degradation or dismissal of any cop who failed to bring down his quota with firm, accurate strokes of his blackjack. The political reaction of our city government to the mob violence of the electricians was quite different, however, and the reason was that unions possess political and physical power. This power grows in width and depth and vigor as the mob in question calls to its aid unions with which it has collective treaties.

THE UNION also has the aspect of the underworld or Capone type of gang in its relation to its members, to nonmembers and to employers. Members need not be consulted on issues affecting their right to retain for their own use money which they have earned.

The musicians, for instance, are wholly in the power of one man, Jimmy Petrillo, who admits he is a dictator, but claims to be a good one. No dictator is good, but even a good one would necessarily be un-American or anti-American. The union exceeds its legitimate reason for being when it attempts to coerce its members in their political decisions, but this was done flagrantly in the recent campaign by two unions which claim to be models of propriety, honesty and enlightened administration. These were Sidney Hillman's Clothing Workers and Dave Dubinsky's Garment Workers.

BUT YOU DON'T want me to go into detail about the many points on which the union stands between the citizen and his rights or the community and the community's rights.

However, I want to emphasize my contention that neither the A. F. of L. nor the C. I. O., nor any subdivision of either organization, has any more legal right to violate laws or persecute citizens than the Ku Klux Klan had. When it is argued that persecutions or other abuses are as nothing compared with the good of the larger number the argument skewers itself on the bayonet which defends the legal rights of minorities in our kind of country.

Our unions have become subgovernments under the protection of our public government, but they do not even acknowledge a duty to obey our laws. Unlike public governments, many of them do not even pretend to account for their money or to hold free elections, and this failure, I think, has gone so far as to require compulsion from the Government. I do not say that all unions are lawless, but I notice that those which are well-conducted resent the slightest suggestion that they should be checked up. In other words, they reserve the right to fudge.

NOR DO I AGREE to compulsory collective bargaining. I uphold the right to bargain collectively, but insist that the right to bargain individually is equally precious. Or, to put it better, I indorse collective bargaining for those who want to bargain collectively—which is as far as the law goes, although unions and the labor board have forced many Americans to bargain thus who didn't want to. This was done by forcing them to join unions against their will.

Now, does all this show a bias against labor or unions as such? Many union leaders insist that it does, but they are not unbiased themseves, and anyone who reads the labor press objectively will be sure to admit that it is very unfair in its discussions of persons and opinions in disagreement with the union position. I am sorry to have to say that the union leaders as a whole failed to meet the requirements of character, intelligence, citizenship and honesty which accompany the power that they have enjoyed. Because the restraints are almost negligible their position calls for unusually fine character, but on the average these leaders have been no better than our minor and more paltry politicians.

But let us be of good cheer, because we are not getting results out of our great skill, plant, resources and wealth, and war draws nigher. If it comes, all discussion of minute Constitutional rights will become academic and historical, and all of us will damn well pitch in and do as we are told.

Admiral Leahy Goes To Vichy

By Dorothy Thompson

An Excellent Reminder Of Our Concern In The Seaways

THE CHOICE of Admiral Leahy as Ambassador to the Vichy government is excellent. His mere presence there is a reminder that the United States is an oceanic power, that the disposition of the seaways of the world concerns us and that, therefore, we are not indifferent to the fate of the derelict French Empire. The admiral leaves a post as Governor of Puerto Rico to go to Vichy, and is fully acquainted with the importance of the disposition of Martinique and other French possessions in the Western Hemisphere. And certainly it is of advantage to the United States to keep cool-headed, competent, well-informed men at as many listening posts as possible.

THE GOVERNMENT of Marshal Petain and his Vice Premier Pierre Laval is, of course, making as much as it can out of the appointment of an Ambassador, which is an act of recognition. There are certain dangers in this recognition, if we delude ourselves about the nature of the Vichy government and its function, from the standpoint of the real masters of France: the Germans.

The Vichy government does not rule France at all. Two-thirds of France is occupied by Germany, and that two-thirds the vital part of the country, containing Paris, which more than any other capital city except London is the very center and heart of the country; and containing also all the heavy industries, the chief ports and approximately two-thirds of the food production. The France governed by Vichy is like a United States in which the eastern and western seacoasts, Washington and the whole area north of the Mason and Dixon line are under foreign occupation.

THIS DISARMED, defeated and surrounded third of France is permitted a "government" by the Germans, and this government has, in fact, about as much independence as the government of Slovakia. Should the Germans desire to take over the rest of France tomorrow nothing on earth could prevent them from doing so. If, therefore, they do not do so it is because there is an advantage to Germany in having a French government in one remnant of France: an advantage to Germany in having something that can call itself "France" and conduct negotiations with Germany and with other nations.

This is the policital and moral position of the Vichy government. It exists by the grace of Germany. It is utterly unable to act independently. And we may well ask what advantage there is to its existence for Germany.

IN THE FIRST PLACE, Hitler, like all usurpers, has a passion for "legality." He always prefers to preserve appearances. If he can get a Norwegian, Danish, Dutch, French, Czech, Slovakian or Rumanian government to enforce his law he can better confuse both the native inhabitants of each country and the outside world.

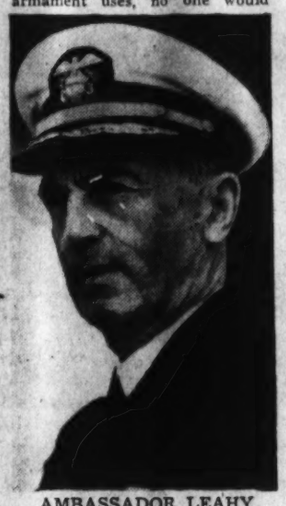
Secondly, he is trying to present himself as the creator of a "New European Order" and as a force for order itself. A Europe which from end to end was in total occupation by German troops and German governors could hardly be presented as a "New European Order." A congeries of puppet governments could preserve the outer appearance of being "European."

Also, the ambiguity of law and authority created by governments which are not true governments is very likely to give rise to internal dissensions and outright revolt. In a disarmed and impotent state such revolts can happen spontaneously or they can, on the appropriate occasion, be engineered by the Germans themselves, playing upon old feuds and personal ambitions. The Germans can then enter as restorers of order among peoples "so divided that they are incapable of self-government." The Nazis, as "restorers of peace and order," have a far more gratifying role from the viewpoint of world opinion and of the inhabitants themselves than if they come in as conquerors.

We have before us, at this moment, the example of Rumania, where, as the final triumph of Nazi intrigue, Rumanians are killing each other and therefore creating the perfect excuse for total German intervention as a force for "law and order."

FINALLY, A WHOLLY dependent government like that of Vichy can perform functions for the Axis in the outside world which Axis representatives are incapable of.

If, for instance, the whole of France were occupied and Nazi emmissaries were in this country attempting to persuade Americans to break the British blockade by feeding Hitler's victims, thus releasing agricultural products, such as milk, for the manufacture of plastics and other armament uses, no one would



AMBASSADOR LEAHY

"His mere presence there (Vichy) is a reminder that the United States is an oceanic power" listen to them. But Americans, who love France and feel deeply sorry for her, do listen to emissaries from Vichy, telling the same story.

The Vichy government is, therefore, useful to Hitler and that is why it exists.

AS LONG AS our own Government is perfectly clear in its mind that this is the situation, there is a distinct advantage in having an "Ambassador" at Vichy. If our purpose in being there is to get information for the State Department and keep our eyes peeled for developments in the Empire, that is a useful advantage.

But if we deceive ourselves through those multiple personal contacts that diplomacy cultivates; if the recognition of Vichy opens the way for a further influx into this country of Nazi agents-once-removed, then we shall be making fools of ourselves and in no way be serving our own interests or the ultimate interests of France.

The Vichy government, so far, has done nothing to recommend it to the admiration of Americans. The gross farce of one set of discredited French politicians putting on trial their predecessors—against whose policies Marshal Petain himself never publicly protested—thus smearing Frenchmen and the British with responsibility for the war, is a dirty public washing that does not impress.

The world knows that Hitler planned this war for 20 years, and systematically prepared it for 7; a war against France which Britain could have allowed by collusion with Hitler—that being, actually, Hitler's hope and plan. Many Englishmen, furthermore, were prepared to fall in with it.

The treason of the Petain government to her ally in the disposal of the French fleet; its callously logical estimate that the French collapse would mean the immediate collapse of Britain and that they could cash in on being the first to conciliate the victors; the brutal treatment of Frenchmen whose "crime" was to have worked and written against Nazism; the presence in the government, shielded and protected by Petain of Pierre Laval, who is the most discredited political figure in Europe and whose very head, to say nothing of his political ambitions, would seem to depend upon the total defeat of Britain; the record of Marshal Petain himself as a defeatist even in the last war, to which testimony has been given in the memoirs of Clemenceau, Poincare and Joffre—these and many other facts reveal the nature of the Vichy government in a far from flattering light.

The Vichy government certainly does not represent the Frenchmen of the Occupied Area. M. Laval, according to all reports, represents nobody at all, for there is increasing evidence that Frenchmen realize that a betrayed Britain is still fighting France's war and is her only hope for liberation.

NO ONE, apparently, represents France today, unless it be those students who rioted in Paris, to be suppressed by the Nazis.

YET EVERY FRENCHMAN who still tills his land, does his work, holds his tongue, and keeps silent but impotent faith with a nation that no decrees from Vichy can wean from the concepts of freedom and equality represents France. It is to him that Winston Churchill lately talked. The twin ideas of freedom and equality are as inalienable from France as the soft French air, the poplar-guarded fields, the deeply humane spirit of all its literature and its art.

This French faith has been betrayed, and the French state that should have incorporated and shielded it has been, through betrayal, defeated. But the people of France have not yet betrayed themselves, and until they do they are not yet wholly defeated. It is on their stubborn faith and passive resistance, and on the same faith and the same resistance of millions of Czechs and Norwegians and Poles and Danes and Dutch and all the others, that Nazism will fail in its attempt to create a "New Order."

What failed in France was not the French people but the French salons, the French politicians, the French General Staff. What failed was the transmission system, not the organism.

France is not this government nor any other government. France is the peasants and workers and artists and intellectuals who, whether at home or abroad, keep faith with her faith. They have never deserted France—they have not done so now; they never will do so.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Luke Twitchell On Induction

Dear Elmer: Well, I am in the army, but I won't be much help to it for a long time on account of being all worn out by the physical examination. I had an idea it was easy to get into a war today, but I find it is almost impossible. I can't make out yet whether I was being examined for the Army or for a Mister America Contest.

My great - great - grandfather fought at Bunker Hill when he had flat feet, a complete set of false teeth and one glass eye. Always I have the idea that what counts is how a man can fight and not what shape his teeth are in or whether he has had his tonsils out, but do I learn different!

Even when I was examined for life insurance it wasn't so tough. Five times I try to explain to the doctors getting into the Army wasn't my idea anyhow, and that I showed up because Uncle Sam invited me, and why treat me like I was trying to put something over? What was I drafted for, anyhow, a war or a screen test?

What gets me is the way they go over my teeth. Say, ain't it enough I should lick Hitler without being expected to eat him? They poke around my uppers and lowers like they suspected I was using somebody else's teeth and they find trouble I didn't even know I had with 'em. If my teeth don't give me no trouble, why should they worry the United States Army in a time like this? I will lay you 2 to 1 that Napoleon's teeth were punkeroo, and I think I read a piece once what said Julius Caesar, George Washington, U. S. Grant and most of the Green Mountain boys didn't see their dentists twice a year, either.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl Subtly Encourages One Man While Professing Loyalty to Another; What Should First Man Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The problem I am about to present concerns three persons—June, John and myself. June and John have known each other about six months, and during that time they have been "dating" regularly. Of late, they haven't gone out with anyone else, only with each other. They are not engaged, but they do enjoy each other's company very much. John, I think, is in love with June. But June isn't sure.

I am slightly acquainted with John, and while I had seen him around with June, I had never met her until last week. I was more than interested by her straightforward, genuine charm. And, judging by her words and actions, she is interested in me. Wanting to play fairly—and not being sure just what is the nature of the "understanding" between John and June—I talked to June about it.

However, we came to no conclusion. June doesn't want to hurt John's feelings and yet she would like to have dates with me. So what is the best thing for each—or all—of us to do? Should I talk to John about it? I have tried to think it out, weighing all angles, but I find myself going in circles. It seems to me that if June were to have dates with other fellows—not necessarily with me—she would be better able to decide whether she prefers John to anyone else.

But perhaps I'm being a little selfish. If so, I want to know it. I can readily understand why John would love June—because she is a remarkable girl. That's why I'm so interested in her. And while you may call me selfish, I want everyone in the situation to get a fair break, if possible. We would appreciate any help you can give us. SKIP.

Contender Should Declare Intention

DEAR SKIP: In the light of the old saying, "All's fair in love and war," it seems to me you are being remarkably unselfish, in giving so much protective thought to John's stake in this triangle. Particularly so, since he is only an acquaintance and was not, I gather, deliberately instrumental in your meeting June.

The gentleman's code prohibits him from undercutting a friend in any enterprise. But amongst acquaintances, it's "every man for himself" in the game of hearts. Were it not so, few "true love" matches would ever be made. There would be little value in young men and women constantly pushing back their social horizons and systematically enlarging their fields of "contact."

Why do young people (and almost all unattached persons, for that matter) feel a constant necessity to "go about socially?" Primarily for the purpose (whether or not they realize it) of "meeting their fate." If "finders were keepers," in the sense that either boys or girls were ethically bound to maintain exclusive loyalty to the first person of the opposite sex who introduced them into a new group, their opportunities for social growth would die aborning.

Your spontaneous inquiry into the nature of June's "understanding" with John—when you realized the desirability of special friendship with her—was an instinctively honest and "growing" sort of gesture. But I am not sure she met the challenge squarely. There is some implication, in her conduct as described, that she is weighing the worth of the bird-in-hnad (John) against the merits of the bird-in-the-bush (yourself).

It is impossible to determine, from June's reaction, whether she considers you seriously as a rival to John. Under her seemingly "straightforward" manner, she may be playing a rather selfish game—the game of discreetly flirting with other young men, in order to heighten John's interest in her. But that, of course, is a very old game with women—long since made respectable by conventional usage, and generally justified by the "all's fair" philosophy cited above.

Since June has subtly encouraged your hopes without making a move to clarify the tangle, and since you want to feel conscience-free to make a bold bid for her friendship—I think you should serve notice on John that you're out for his girl, if you can win her.

I'm sure you don't need to be reminded not to repeat any of her somewhat defensive remarks to him. And it would be a little impertinent to inquire into the nature of his feeling for her. Just let him know you're in the running for her favor, and he can't ask any greater sportsmanship than this daring forewarning. It is not your responsibility to save him from hurt. If he's any sort of man, he can,—and would want to,—look out for himself. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

A pair of full sized comfortable studio couches placed at right angles to each other in one corner of the room, with a square lamp table joining them, made comfortable beds for guests, but between times, when the room served as a study, they are grand for lounging. Their coverings are bright green corduroy, the rug a deeper green, while two walls and the ceiling are papered in a Victorian flowered pattern wall paper and two walls are painted white. 'D. C. Melody,' Opening Here Next Week, Will Take Capital Widows 'for a Ride'

WASHINGTON'S widows will be taken for a ride when "D. C. Melody" opens next week at the Wardman Park Theater. Four of the characters, wickedly costumed for the Washington Theater by Artist Catherine Vagnoni, swing and sway to the tune "40,000 Widows." "There's the Tweedy Businesswoman, for instance," to quote Miss Vagnoni, who has gone to town in her first venture into costume design. "She means business, in more ways than one. Then there's the Homebody—looks harmless, but those apron strings will trip someone up sooner or later. As for the Siren and the Lush Blonde, they don't even try to disguise themselves." All four widows have one thing in common—a surrealistic pair of male hands (represented by workmen's gloves) sewed to their outfits.

"SIREN"

Also working on the costumes for the show is Dorothy Croissant, who did the series of masks for the "Marble Faces of Washington" number. They are worn by girls in ballet skirts who hover around the principals during a sight-seeing trip. Made of papier-mache, all except that of George Washington are based on actual statues around town. "Washington's front view is the Stuart head," says Miss Croissant. "I got the side view from a postage stamp . . . I wanted to include an eagle and a Q Street bridge bison but I was afraid they might steal the show."

A girl who was having her fur coat remade called the store shortly before the Black and White Ball and asked if it would be ready in time for the dance. The furrier said no, but invited her, as a customer of long standing, to look over his stock and borrow any fur wrap she wished for that evening. In a Cinderella mood, she first selected one that didn't look to valuable. "Oh, no; you're going to a BALL," the furrier said, and pressed on her a little number priced at twice what her own coat cost. She wore the coat to the dance, and, feeling even more like Cinderella returned it first thing the next morning.

Local Gray Ladies, though their organization is nonpolitical, were gratified to learn of Albert Gonzales' election to the New Mexico legislature. They've been interested in the young man, now 27, since he came to Walter Reed Hospital 10 years ago in an effort to regain his sight. The treatments failed, but with the help of Mrs. Mary Norton Lower, Mrs. Clarence D. Barrett and Mrs. Frances Davis (none of whom is now living), Albert graduated from Roosevelt High School and learned braille.

He received his A. B. in New Mexico, then returned to Washington and became the only blind student ever to graduate from Georgetown Law School. Again his "eyes" were the Gray Ladies; Mrs. Ira E. Bennett, Mrs. Richard Fourchey, Mrs. William E. Lewis and Miss Grace Ocumpaugh spent long hours reading to him. "He absorbed those law books like a sponge," Mrs. Bennett recalls. "We used to say they went in our eyes and out our mouths."

New Basque Idea In Hollywood

Hollywood, Calif.—When Orry-Kelly streamlined the Elizabethan basque for 1940 the idea so captured his imagination that he can't relinquish it. Now Orry has a new version that he will introduce on the charming person of Geraldine Fitzgerald. It shows the basque in reverse, the point swooping down in back leaving the front waistline where God put it.

This is done with a bodice in ice blue taffeta and a bouffant skirt in black velvet striped with taffeta. The neckline corresponds by rushing to a deep point in back, remaining Puritan-modest in front.

Evening Jacket

"I want to see something in an evening jacket to wear over a black dress."

"Would you like something in lame? Now, this little jacket has the new long torso——"

"How much is it?"

"This? Oh, only $13.95, and it won't tarnish——"

"But I want something less expensive. You see this is just an old dress."

"We-l-l, I have a little silver and blue lame at only $10.95——"

"But this is really a very old dress——"

"Well, I have some little white crepe jackets with gold scroll work down the front. See . . . now this is only $7.95."

"Haven't you any with a little less gold?"

"Gold is very good this season. However, I believe I do have one with some silver scroll work."

"I wouldn't care for silver. What do you have in colored jackets?"

"Well, here's a little red wool with the gold scroll work——"

"I wouldn't want red."

"We'll, here's one in green with the gold scroll——"

"Haven't you any without gold scroll?"

"Yes, I have a little white one here with some gold maple leaves . . . and oh, yes, here's a salmon with only some gold tracery and crystal beads——"

"How much is the salmon?"

"Let's see . . . oh, only $12.95. Oh, yes, and I have one here without any gold for $16.95——"

"That's too much! I might as well buy a new dress."

"Well, now, I can show you a little gold sequin bolero for only $5.95."

"Haven't you anything in velvet?"

"Yes, I have a red velvet with gold scroll work—"

"Say, tell me something? Isn't there a jacket in town without gold scroll work?"

"Well, of course gold is very good this season. But I believe I do have a little black velvet with nailheads—"

"I wouldn't care for that"

"Then how would you like a little dinner sweater? Here's one in green chenille with gold sequins . . . and here's one in black with silver sequins and jet—"

"I don't believe I'm the sweater type. Haven't you any jackets in wool?"

"Oh yes we have the white—and all the colors—with the gold scroll work—

"Never mind. I believe I'll look at blouses."

"All right. Here's a very smart one in gold lame for only $11.95—

"But this is really an old dress—"

"And here's one in metal cloth with the gold scroll work on the collar—"

"Haven't you anything simpler?"

"Here's a white crepe with gold tracing."

"That's not so bad. How much?"

"Wait—let's see . . . Oh $13.95. But if you're really interested in blouses I have a lovely little tucked model here with a pastel beaded collar—"

"Wait! That's more what I've been looking for."

"Just look at that detail . . . and that handwork on the collar—

"It's very lovely. How much?"

"I believe that's $18.95—"

"For a blouse?"

"I know, but it really pays to get a good blouse. Besides what's a few more dollars if you really see anything you like. The way I look at it you really owe it to yourself—"

"Pardon me but where will I find the evening dresses?"

"Better or moderate priced?"

"BETTER."

Flowers Urged To Enhance Facial Beauty

Blooms Can Thin Round Face, Fill Out Too Thin One

By Ida Jean Kain

THERE'S a very gay song about the vision with the wind and the rain in her hair, but for all of that most women who want to haunt a man's heart will rely on flowers in their tresses.

The technique in flower arrangement for this purpose is as varied as hair styling and it follows much the same principles. If your face is rounded it is beauty strategy to pin your flowers high behind your pompadour or top-knot curls. This adds to your height as well as the length of your face. Then, to further the illusion of a longer face, wear a V-necklace. These two factors are guaranteed to work beauty magic.

Aids to Beauty

If you are a girl with a heart-shaped face—and wish it were a bit more curvesome—the stylists suggest wearing flowers at each side of the face, over the ears, to give a wider line. This is also an alluring trick for the girl with the too-thin face. In addition, the girl who considers her neck a trifle long can wear a necklace that comes up high on the throat and emphasizes the curves.

There are even ways of softening a too-emphatic profile. If this happens to be your beauty bugaboo try a slantwise arrangement of flowers, worn barette fashion, low on the hair.

If your best beau wires a corsage let's hope he is up to date on flower styles and orders it for your hair. But if not, you can fit it—almost any type of corsage can be adapted to head dress with the aid of combs and bobby pins.

Don't hesitate to wear roses, camellias or carnations in your hair. And they tell us that exotic lilies are in high favor with the sophisticated belles. And orchids, of course, are always sure of top honors!

Many Elegant Ways

It's all right to pin your flowers on the shoulders—but there are so many more interesting and elegant ways of wearing them. Besides, if your figure is wider than you wish it were, it is more flattering to wear the flowers near the center of the neckline. And only if you are slim-waisted should you wear a corsage at the beltline.

There are lovely flower necklaces of gardenias and camellias which are guaranteed to make you a belle of the ball. This arrangement is particularly flattering to the girl with the too-thin throat.

And there are fresh flower bracelets—by all means, wear them on the left wrist so they will show while you're dancing.

Flowers give you an elegant feeling—let them make you feel elegant, too! Wear them in the arrangement that is most flattering to you.

Beauty Hints From Vienna

Hollywood, Calif.—Luli Deste, Viennese beauty, has probably the most unique set of beauty hints in the world. She uses nothing but natural food products to beautify her skin because they contain pure natural oils and beneficial complexion vitamins. Peanut oil, or peanut butter, as a facial mask, are used to soften her skin, orange juice for whitening (as we use lemon juice), and cream off the top of the milk bottle as a night cream.

Capital Sets Record For Party-Giving

More Than 20 Affairs, Including Luncheons, Teas and Cocktail Parties, Keep Socialities Dashing From One Place to Another

Washington loves to break records and yesterday managed to shatter its own for party-giving as more than 20 topflight fetes—including teas, luncheons and cocktail parties—had social lights dashing madly from one place to another all day.

To mention a few Mr. and Mrs. William McKee Dunn's luncheon for the young set . . . Mrs. Higginson Rogers' cocktail party . . . Mrs. John Allan Dougherty's tea . . . Miss Mae Hamilton's "at home" . . . and the reception given by Mrs. William Livingston Crounse.

Looking "fresh as daisies" (considering they had danced until nearly dawn at the George Garrett's spectacular ball the night before) some 60 guests turned up for the Dunn luncheon. The party was given in honor of Miss Elaine Darlington, daughter of Mrs. George Garrett, and guests were, for the most part, out of towners who had come on for the debut ball. Receiving with her mother was Miss Mildred Dunn. It was a buffet luncheon and the youngsters were seated at small tables arranged over the lower floor of the house.

Mrs. Ogle Is Honor Guest

Mrs. Higginson Rogers' party was delightfully informal. Guests dropped in between the hours of 5 and 7 o'clock to chat and sip before dashing on to another party.

In her apartment on Columbia Road Mrs. John Allan Dougherty gathered in a congenial group for tea in honor of Mrs. Charlotte Ogle who will return to her home in Fairfield, Conn., the middle of this week. Mrs. Ogle has been feted at many parties since her arrival and several more are planned before she leaves. Mrs. Charles Drake is entertaining at a luncheon today and Mrs. Louis Owsley will follow it up with a tea. Mrs. I. T. Mann will give a dinner party in honor of the visitor tomorrow evening.

Yesterday Mrs. Dougherty received her guests wearing a smart frock of blue crepe with a silver metal bodice. Assisting at the tea table were Mrs. Mann, Mrs. Frederic Coleman, Mrs. Clifton Carter, Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, Mrs. Allan Reed and Mrs. Parker West.

Bright yellow chrysanthemums were used throughout the apartment of Mrs. Mae Hamilton yesterday afternoon when she entertained in the second of her series of "at homes." Yellow roses were used effectively on the tea table.

Pouring were Mrs. Archibald Davis, Mrs. John Davidge, Miss Katherine Judge, Mrs. William Tompkins, Mrs. Ralph Worthington, Miss Emily Davis, Mrs. Daniel Stapleton, Miss Stellita Stapleton and Mrs. George Hamilton, jr.

Portraits Center Of Attraction

At the pleasant home of Mrs. William Livingston Crounse guests moved in and out for the reception. She was gowned in an aqua frock with a lame bodice and pleated skirt. Fox was used to trim the gown. She received in the drawing room where a portrait by Gainsborough was admired by the guests. They also visited the library where a Rembrandt provoked much conversation.

Assisting throughout the afternoon were Lady Broderick, Countess de Castellan, Mrs. McCeney Werlich, Miss Alys Downing, Miss Lydia Loring, Mrs. James Oliver Murdock, and Miss Dorothy Tirrell. Bunches of grapes were arranged on either side of the bouquet of roses that centered the tea table.

Seen here and there . . . Justice James McReynolds surrounded by a group of friends . . . Lady Chalkley in a smart brown ensemble . . . Capt. and Mrs. Donald Bingham . . . Mme. Richardo Alfaro . . . the Misses Ida and Pauletta Guffey who were making the rounds . . . Senator Arthur Capper . . . Col. and Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheim, she in a woodsey green ensemble . . . Mrs. J. Lawrence Houghteling chatting with Mrs. George Barnett, who wore a silver fox cape over her ensemble . . . George Williams and Edward Van Devanter conversing . . . Baroness von Below . . . Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis . . . George Abell and Michel Mok chatting with Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja . . . Mrs. Edward E. Gann, in a mink cape and many, many more.

CAPITAL WHIRL

By SALLY SWIFT

THE VISITORS who came from out of town for the Garretts' week-end dance enjoyed a rare privilege. Having tea with the former Ambassador and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss at Dumbarton Oaks, someone expressed what was in the minds of all of us and asked to see the collection in the Byzantine wing which was recently started by the Blisses and presented to Harvard University. As if one had rubbed a magic lamp doors were opened, lights came on, and the beauties of Byzantine art were ours to look at and remember. Each item in the collection is perfect and each is displayed in a setting that is extremely satisfying. One doesn't have to be a connoisseur or to be conversant with the significance of the Byzantine era to enjoy the sheer beauty of those treasures of another age.

An unconscious tribute was paid to Mrs. Bliss and to her unselfishness and singleness of purpose in assembling the collection over a period of years, when one of her guests indicated a case of jewels and said, "I don't see how Mrs. Bliss has resisted wearing this gorgeous gold jewelry all these years."

Pouring tea that afternoon for Mrs. Bliss was pretty Countess van Rechteren Limpur who, in her enthusiasm at answering questions about the shop being opened tomorrow for the benefit of Dutch sailors, almost put both lemon and cream in the same teacup.

THE SHOP is at 1739 Connecticut Avenue and will sell such fascinating Christmas presents as Dutch delft tiles, little Dutch shoes and examples of Dutch glassware and of Bali art and jewelry. Especially charming gifts are the books on Holland written for children by Hilda van Stockum, each one autographed and containing, besides illustrations, an original watercolor by the author.

Money from sales will go for relief of the Dutch sailors who, cut off from home and family, are carrying on their common cause with the British. Honorary chairman for the shop is Mme. van Swinderen, sister of Charles Carroll Glover and mother of Mrs. Derek Hoyer Millar, whose husband was for many years Dutch Minister to London. Sponsors are Mrs. Truxtun Beale, Mrs. Eliot Wadsworth, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover, Miss Laura Harlan, Mrs. Hugh Cumming, jr., Mrs. Stanley Woodward and Hans Kindler. Chairman of the active committee is Mrs. C. Matthews Dick, and helping her are Mrs. Edward Reed, Mrs. Jasper Du Bose and Bartholomew Landherr.

CHRISTOPHER BRAMWELL, first secretary of the British Embassy, has just been ordered back to London and will be stationed at the foreign office. This puts it squarely up to the newly married Mrs. Bramwell to arrange quarters for her children by a former marriage in America, dispose of the house in Georgetown into which the Bramwells have just moved, and prepare to accompany her husband to England when he embarks during the latter part of January or the first of February.

Last reports had Mrs. Bramwell dressed in her best and on her way to call on her mother, Mrs. Charles E. Courtney, with the proposition," how would you like to have three little grandchildren for your very own for the duration?" Or she might only say, "Don't look now, but you will be followed home by three grandchildren about the end of January."

IT'S PRETTY HARD to spread more than a temporary veneer of glamour over Washington parties but they are great fun. At the George Garretts' dance the other night Mrs. Garrett and her daughter, Elaine Darlington, looked perfectly ravishing. George was distinguished, and the guests were chic and beautifully dressed, many of the guests were persons of note, but the minute formal greetings were over everyone went right on being cosy and having a good time.

One guest, after an admiring glance at the gold lame hangings which decorated the Sulgrave Club for the occasion, asked Mr. Garrett if she could have some of the material to make a dress after the "ball was over." Late in the evening the debutantes, their beaux, and not a few of the older generation sat on the floor in the ballroom and sang under the leadership of Washington's own Patsy Prochnik. And Mike McConihe went around offering to share a pair of socks with anyone willing to use them on alternate weeks. It was the first pair of socks that Margot McConihe had ever knitted and, though Mike referred to them as gunny sacks, he felt that the distinction of wearing them was too much responsibility for him alone.

Army Ready To Wage War Upon Disease

Medical Corps Plans Big Program to Guard Health of Soldiers

By Stephen J. McDonough

Associated Press Science Writer

The Army Medical Corps has underway the greatest program in its history to protect America's emergency Army against disease.

In every previous war bacteria have been more deadly than bullets in killing soldiers, Col. James S. Simmons, of the Medical Corps, said.

"From past experience it may be assumed that the rapid expansion of the Army will be accompanied by an increase in disease, and that the inducted men will be exposed to localized outbreaks of various infections, especially those which are transmitted through the respiratory secretions," he added in an interview yesterday.

Preventives Ready

However, for the first time, he said, medical science has ready a host of vaccines, anti-toxins, and treatments which promise to reduce the number of casualties.

Col. Simmons said it was impossible to predict what diseases might be most troublesome if the American forces should engage in another war. For instance, he explained, the possibility of outbreaks of certain diseases would be greately increased if troops should be moved to Central or South America in the defense of the Western Hemisphere.

Disease incidence, he said, would depend on "many complex factors, such as geographical location, climate, season, local conditions in the areas involved, and the susceptibility or immunity of the troops exposed."

"Therefore, all of the wartime plagues must be considered as potential hazards, and plans must be made to combat them," he added.

To Enforce Hygiene

The first steps being taken are the enforcement of the Army's strict rules of sanitation and hygiene and the application of similar regulations near Army cantonments.

"This type of extra-military sanitation has been utilized in connection with all maneuvers held this year, and undoubtedly it has contributed to the low incidence of disease among the troops," Col. Simmons said.

All men inducted into the Army are vaccinated against smallpox and typhoid. Studies are now being made on the possible general use of a new tetanus toxoid which protects against gas gangrene infection.

A new yellow fever vaccine developed by the Rockefeller Institute is also now in use and would be given to any troops sent to the tropics.

Other disease preventive steps contemplated are the use of anti-cholera and anti-typhus vaccines.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

John Barbirolli conducts the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall. Program: Suite in E major (Foote), "Sheep May Safely Graze" (Bach-Barbirolli), Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet" (Chaikovski), Symphony No. 5 in C minor (Beethoven).

Many Washingtonians who have been accustomed, before starting on some other Sunday musical quest, to tune their receiving sets for part of a concert by the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society, had the opportunity to hear an entire program in person yesterday afternoon, when the orchestra's tour paused in Constitution Hall. Only the unfamiliar sight of radio engineers at the transmission controls at one side of the stage reminded auditors that they were sharing the music with uncounted thousands of listeners in the Nation's homes, and that their applause was being heard, as well, in the far corners of the land.

Ray C. B. Brown

The occasion came very near being a birthday celebration for Conductor John Barbirolli, who completes his forty-first year on the day these lines are being read. Because of this proximity, the presence on the program of an excerpt from Bach's "Birthday Cantata" for Duke Christian of Saxe-Weissenfels was a noticeable coincidence—either accidental or deliberate. The transcription of the soprano aria, "Sheep May Safely Graze," was Mr. Barbirolli's own, and the admirable scoring for woodwind and strings of the beautiful theme was a credit to his musicianship. It is interesting to know that Mr. Barbirolli informed our resident composer, Mary Howe, that his arrangement had been "undoubtedly inspired and probably influenced" by her two-piano transcription. The performance here was therefore a compliment to Mrs. Howe and her cocitizens.

The concert began with Arthur William Foote's third suite for string orchestra, the one in E major. Foote, who died nearly four years ago in Boston, at the age of 84, was a composer American in training and cosmopolitan in thought. His influence as a teacher of younger American composers is in evidence all about us, and the music he left us as a heritage is cherished as a permanent record of his personality. It speaks of his geniality, his idealism, his clarity of judgment and his wit.

Freshness in Simplicity

Independent of all schools and "isms" Foote pursued a straight course unwarped by fashionable fads, such as atonality and polytonality, which he viewed with ironic amusement. He wrote in complete sincerity and simplicity, with a delightful freshness of melody and invariable good taste. He was concerned not with surprising his auditors by harmonic oddities and technical tricks, but with expressing ideas clearly through sound craftsmanship. What he had to say was always interesting and rewarding, for his style was piquant and his ideas had substance.

Mr. Barbirolli conducted the Foote suite with a patent sympathy for the idiom and the formal grace, if with a little more emotional exaggeration than the composer would have approved. His temperamental fire, perhaps his most salient characteristic on the podium, tempts him into dramatic emphasis where it is not needed. Where drama is of the essence, as in Chaikovski's "Romeo and Juliet," he sweeps one along with him by the elan of his attack and the fervor of his imagination.

One wonders why Mr. Barbirolli brought not exactly coals to Newcastle but two overly familiar works, Chaikovski's fantasy and Beethoven's fifth symphony, to the concert hall where the National Symphony Orchestra plays both with an effectiveness equal to, and in some points surpassing, the performances by the Philharmonic. The visiting orchestra obviously has more string volume, but its woodwind has curious errancies in intonation, and the various instrumental choirs do not blend with strict coherence.

N. Y. A. String Quartet Also Heard

National Youth Administration presents the NYA String Quartet of Philadelphia Sunday afternoon at the art exhibit in Departmental Auditorium. Artists: Marion Head, Morris Shulik, Joseph di Pasquali and Esther Gruhn. Program: Two Movements for String Quartet (Samuel Barber) "American" String Quartet in F major (Antonin Dvorak).

As a part of the activities of National Art Week, the National Youth Administration had the happy idea to present a talented ensemble from Philadelphia yesterday afternoon and last evening at the exhibition in Departmental Auditorium. While not all the visitors paid undivided attention to the music, those who chose to listen heard quartet playing of excellent quality and contagious zest. The youthful foursome consisted of Marion Head, Morris Shulik, Joseph di Pasquale and Esther Gruhn—members of the N. Y. A. Symphony Orchestra of Philadelphia.

Two members of the quartet are 23 and the other two are 21 years old, and they have already attained an expertness in chamber music that some older musicians can envy. Their tonal blending is thoroughly balanced and rich, their intonation is accurate, and they have notable consentience in interpretation.

1940 Census May Change House Seats

President Will Receive Figures Today, Make Them Public Soon

By the Associated Press

The Census Bureau tabulated the final 1940 census figures yesterday and compared the probable apportionment of Congressional seats for the next decade.

The results will be reported to the President today and are expected to be made public by the White House soon thereafter. Meanwhile, the census officials declined all predictions on the figures.

It was learned, however, that the revised total of the April 1 population of the 48 States and the District of Columbia was slightly higher than the 131,409,881 preliminary estimate issued by the bureau about two months ago.

House Seats May Switch

On Capitol Hill, the apportionment figures were awaited for their possible effect on the future careers of individual Congressmen.

Reapportionment on the basis of the present 435-seat size of the House and the mathematical formula used in 1930—the procedure so far favored by Congress—may switch a number of seats.

On the basis of the preliminary figures, which are not expected to change much, California appeared to have won two more seats than the 20 she now holds. Other indicated gains were: Arizona, from 1 seat to 2 seats; Florida, from 5 to 6; New Mexico, from 1 to 2; North Carolina, from 11 to 12; Oregon, from 3 to 4; and Tennessee, from 9 to 10.

The indicated losers of seats were: Illinois, from 27 to 26; Indiana, from 12 to 11; Kansas, from 7 to 6; Massachusetts, from 15 to 14; Nebraska, from 5 to 4; Ohio, from 24 to 23; Oklahoma, from 9 to 8; and Pennsylvania, from 34 to 33.

House Must Decide

One of the possibilities suggested by the preliminary figures was that California might get 3, instead of 2, extra seats, in which case, Iowa might have to surrender 1 of its 9 places.

Apportionment is done by a complicated mathematical formula prescribed by Congress. Under a law passed last spring, this is the situation:

The first week in January, the President will relay to Congress the census report he will receive today. Congress may take 60 days to decide wether it wants to change the apportionment method or the number of seats, or whether to have any reapportionment at all.

Preacher, Once Magician, Uses Presto, Chango in Sermon Debut

By the United Press

Chicago, Dec. 1.—A handsome young preacher produced an empty cylinder from nowhere before an astonished congregation at St. Paul's Congregational Church today, deftly filled it with colored streamers representing Charity and Love, and a flick of his wrist pulled out a bouquet of roses.

"As you sow your good deeds," he said, "so shall they blossom."

Thus John Booth, 28, a University of Chicago theology student who has supported himself as a magician for six years, demonstrated his sermon in his first professional appearance as a preacher. By his "miracles of magic" he hopes to rekindle enthusiasm for the church.

Booth is tall and dark and wears a trim mustache. He learned his first "magic" from Carl Germain, a teacher in the Sunday school of a Cleveland church. Since his graduation from McMaster University at Hamilton, Ont., he has appeared as a magician in cities throughout the world, written three brooks for conjurers, and received recognition from a national trade journal as "one of the nine foremost magicians of the day."

He was so pleased when he received an invitation to appear as a visiting pastor at St. Paul's today, he wrote the musical score and words of a hymn, "Righteousness and Peace."

It was sung at the morning service at which Booth preached on "The Goal We Never Reach."

3,000 Restaurant Operators Open 3-Day Conclave

Three thousand restaurateurs, members of the southeastern regional division of the National Restaurant Association, began arriving here yesterday for a three-day convention to show, some said, how the business has progressed since the old Stadt Herbergh Cafe opened in New York as America's first in 1640.

Better food, more attractively served, is the trend, they said, while setting up a vast exhibit of cookery refinements in the Mayflower Hotel.

The convention opens today with a "get-acquainted lunch," followed by a meeting to be presided over by Al G. Earnest, president of the Washington Restaurant Association. Delegates will be welcomed by Dr. George C. Ruhland, superintendent of the District Health Department.

"Selective Service" will be discussed by Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, District selective service director, at 1:40 p. m. Following him, Miss Harriett Elliott, member National Defense Advisory Commission; Dr. M. L. Wilson, of the Agriculture Department, and Miss Grace Smith, of Toledo, Ohio, president, National Restaurant Association, will speak.

Speeches of trade interest, beginning at 8:30 p. m. today, will be followed at 10:15 by a reception for Miss Smith, a buffet supper and dancing.

Raw Materials Hike U. S. Imports By $493,000,000

An expansion of raw material purchases caused United States imports to increase $493,000,000 during the first year of the European war, the tariff commission reported yesterday.

Total imports for the year ended last August were valued at $2,625,000,000, the commission said in an analysis of the effect of the war on imports.

The raw materials accounting for the import increase, the report said, originated primarily in Asia and to a lesser extent in Canada, Latin America, Africa and Oceania (islands in the Southern Pacific.)

Trade with Europe declined less than expected, the commission said, because increased imports from the United Kingdom partially offset decreased shipments from the continent. Despite the war, England sent products valued at $166,800,000 here compared with $144,200,000 in the previous 12 months.

Only A. F. of L. members would be permitted to hold party offices, it was announced, and no overtures would be made to the C. I. O.'s political adjunct—Labor's Non-Partisan League of New Jersey which includes A. F. of L. union members.

10 D. C. Selects Go To Anti-Tank Unit

Training in 93d Infantry Battalion Will Begin Today

Ten "rookies" from the Washington area will be assigned today to the crack Ninety-third Infantry Anti-Tank Battalion at Fort George G. Meade, Md.

Returning to the reception center last night after week-end leave, they were the first of the District's 76 selectees to learn in what direction their 12 months of Army life would take them. They will remain at Fort Meade.

Other Washington area recruits, fort officers said, will be assigned to various other outfits later.

These selectees, it was announced, will begin training today with the anti-tank unit which, with the newly-added recruits, will number 106 men:

Feldman Named Clerk General

Feldman was named a clerk general and Goldsmith, a truck driver. The others are classed as "basic soldiers" and will join the regulars and other selectees in the antitank unit in training for defense against mechanized war of the type specialized in by Hitler's panzer divisions.

Operation of the 37-mm. antitank gun is one of the chief lessons they will learn.

Their assignment to the battalion does not mean the selectees will join teh outfit's regulars in their the fort. They will remain in their comfortable brick barracks, evacuated by the regulars to make way for them, until their own barracks, now a-building, are completed. When the selectees move into them, the regulars will return to the barracks now occupied by the rookies.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed at District selective service induction headquarters that ten more young men from the Washington area would be signed up for a year's army life next Friday to replace the originally selected men who failed to pass Army physical examinations.

Warns Against "Partisanship"

They will be ordered up before then by local selective service boards, enlisted at the induction station and bustled off, probably immediately, to the reception center at Fort Meade.

On the national selective sepvice front, Director C. A. Dykstra cautioned individual members of selective service appeal boards against occupational partisanship.

On the local front, selective service boards were disclosed to have started a search for new and cheaper quarters, as requested by District Director Albert L. Cox, and five had already moved.

Gen. Cox has informed board chairmen that rent-free quarters in the schools were proving too expensive because of bills for heat, light and custodial service covering occupancy after regular schqol hours. The expenses of virtually all local boards have been in excess of the $40 to $60 maximum recommended, he said. One board's expenses ran to $200 a month.

Board No. 3, one of five which moved to new quarters Saturday, left the Mann School, Forty-fifth and Newark Streets Northwest, and established itself at American University, 3500 Nebraska Avenue Northwest. In what the board's clerk said was "a patriotic service," the university agreed to charge no more than $50 a month.

A $50 limit also was guaranteed Board No. 13, which moved from Patterson School, Tenth and U Streets Northwest, to 1124 Vermont Avenue Northwest.

Other Shifts Announced

Other shifts involved No. 2, from the Murch School, Thirty-sixth and Ellicott Streets Northwest, to 3000 Connecticut Avenue Northwest; No. 18, from Hayes School, Fifth and K Streets Northeast, to 1130 Maryland Avenue Northeast, and No. 20, from the Brookland School, Tenth and Monroe Streets Northeast, to 1202 Monroe Street Northeast.

Scheduled to move soon are No. 4, from Calvin Coolidge School, Fifth and Tuckerman Streets Northwest, to the Takoma Theater Building, Fourth and Butternut Streets Northwest, and No. 15, from the Bowen School, Third and K Streets Southwest, to 616 Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast.

Boards 8 and 19 hoped to remain in their present quarters, 6, 21 and 23 were investigating the possibility of using police stations, and others were looking around for quarters which would cost no more than $50.

Episcopal Bishop Urges Religious Unity

Rt. Rev. J. E. Freeman Makes Address at Foundry Church

From the Bishop McDowell National Memorial Pulpit of Foundry Methodist Church an Episcopal prelate last night made a stirring appeal for Christian unity.

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, warned that "the day is approaching when exaggerated lines of differences will no longer divide group from group."

Stressing "our fellowship with the Episcopal Church," another phase of Foundry's month-long 126th anniversary celebration, the program had as other participating clerics the Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, Dean of Washington; Dr. C. Leslie Glenn, rector of historic St. John's "Church of the Presidents," Lafayette Square; Dr. Howard S. Wilkinson, rector of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, worship-place of the President; Canon Albert H. Lucas, of Washington Cathedral, Headmaster of St. Alban's School, and Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, host pastor. Arthur W. Howes, jr., directed St. John's choir of men and boys.

"Few men I have known so acted as a prophet in the church of God as did Bishop McDowell. God gave that man a great soul and tonight as I preach his soul is marching on," said Bishop Freeman.

Consecration of the Wedderspoon Clergy Chair, the memorial candlesticks, flower vases and altar desk and first communion in the new chancel were features of the morning service, conducted by Dr. Harris.

To Elect Officers

Officers will be elected by the Washington Numismatic Society at 8 tonight in the Washington Hotel. Martin Richard Lawrence, of Beaverborough, England, will be guest of honor of the coin collectors at the meeting.

Elks Honor 59 Who Died In Past Year

300 Lodge Members And Families Attend Annual Memorial Rites

Washington Lodge of Elks last night paid tribute to 59 members of the order who have died since last December 3.

In annual memorial services in the Elks Club, 919 H Street Northwest, nearly 300 lodgemen and their families heard Robert S. Barrett, grand treasurer of the order, declare the Elks creed to be "contained in the single word—friendship."

Barrett pointed out that the service here was a part of a world-wide ceremony observed in all Elk lodges. Calling attention to the Nation's defense preparations, he asked remembrance of the thousands who died among the 80,000 Elks who served "20 years ago in another war for the principles of democracy."

Each member of the order, Barrett pointed out, has acknowledged a belief in a Supreme Being and, he added, "we are all convinced that our members who have been loyal are forever past the nightmare of pity for the dead."

L. Martin Young, exalted ruler, conducted the ritual with the assistance of lodge officers. John E. Lynch, past exalted ruler, was chairman of the committee on arrangements, and John D. Fitzgerald, past exalted ruler, was vice chairman. They were assisted by the following:

William S. Shelby, secretary; L. Martin Young, exalted ruler; Joseph B. McCann, trustee; William E. Keefer, past trustee; Charles Bush, Joseph C. Easton and Ambrose A. Durkin.

Brookland Civic Group Seeks Elementary School for Area

This is the sixty-fourth article in a series about associations of citizens in the District of Columbia.

An elementary school and recreational facilities for the Northeast area are primary aims this fall and winter of the Brookland Neighborhood Civic Association.

GRADY

Since its organization in 1933, the association has been active also at this time of year in sponsoring an annual holiday home improvement contest. Later, members will cooperate in decorating a community Christmas tree.

The organization serves the Northeast section bounded by Sixteenth Street, Rhode Island Avenue, Twelfth Street, and Kearney Street. Its meetings are held on the third Tuesday of the month at the home of Dr. William Madison, 3109 Fourteenth Street Northeast.

Members have long supported the drive for suffrage in the District. Other standing aims include paving and resurfacing of streets in the area and improvement of school facilities.

They expect this year to organize a junior group in the association, so that the young people can conduct a social and civic program of their own.

President of the 7-year-old civic association is Dr. William T. Grady, a dental surgeon, of 1303 Girard Street Northeast. He has headed the group for three years. Other officers include Miss Grace Brown, vice-president; Mrs. Angela Hayes, secretary; Mrs. Ann Grady, President Grady's wife, corresponding secretary; John Curtis, treasurer; and Mrs. Iona Atkinson, publicity secretary.

A annual tea is held for new residents of the community on Christmas Day. Donations are given annually to some charitable organization, and the group cooperates each year in aiding the Community Chest drive.

Two years ago, the association helped to sponsor the Urban League, which now functions as a city-wide colored employment center, President Grady said. Also begun then was a recreational program, utilizing home recreation rooms of members because of lack of public facilities in the Brookland section.

U. S. Employe Held On Wisconsin Arson Charge

Washington police yesterday held a Department of Agriculture clerk as a fugitive from justice, at the request of Waupaca County (Wis.) authorities, who charged, the Associated Press said, that he had flown there from Washington and set fire to his mother's property in order to collect $1,200 insurance.

Held here is Raymond C. Zuehlke, 33, of 1105 C Street Southwest. Waupaca County District Attorney Paul E. Roman was en route here last night to extradite Zuehlke, according to the Associated Press, which added a warrant charging arson was issued last Friday.

The Zuehlke home at Fremont, Wis., was damaged by fire and explosion on November 24.

St. John's Wins Dispute Over Lands

Knox Promises Navy Won't Demand Tract Of Campus Sought By Housing Agency

St. John's College at Annapolis—America's third oldest institution of learning—appears decisively to have thwarted attempts of the Annapolis Housing Authority to seize part of its campus for a low-cost housing project.

Coincidentally, the college has been relieved of threats that its grounds and even its plant facilities might be annexed by the Naval Academy for use in the national emergency.

Replying to a letter from Dr. Stringfellow Barr, the college president, Secretary of the Navy Knox has stated:

"This will serve to acknowledge your letter of November 19 in which you meet fully the conditions laid down by the President in my conversation with him relative to St. John's College campus. If you have any difficulty in securing the withdrawal of the Annapolis Housing Authority's effort to condemn 1.35 acres of your campus for housing purposes, please let me know and I will be glad to help.

"I am gratified that the meeting of these two conditions, first, that the college will not dispose of its property without first notifying us and giving the Navy a chance to purchase it and, second, that you will not permit the land to be used for any other purpose than that of the college and will not construct on it any but college buildings, clears up the situation from your point of view.

"I wish you all kinds of luck in the days which lie ahead.

"Yours sincerely,

"Frank Knox."

Dr. Barr's fight encompassed what many observers saw as a delicate principle of practice between government and education. William F. Stromeyer, chairman of the Annapolis Housing Authority, contended that the St. John's property is tax-exempt.

The contest dates to last May 9, when Stromeyer offered the institution $20,000 for a tract of 5½ acres, 4 of which are land occupied by St. John's since 1795. Since then some of the college's creditors told the Navy Department, but without authority, that they were sure the college would be delighted to sell the campus and move to another locality.

Dr. Barr said that he is daily expecting court action on the demurrer the college filed with a view to protecting this parcel for college use. "I am hopeful that the authority's condemnation proceedings will fail. However, throughout these proceedings the chairman of the Annapolis Housing Authority has loudly insisted that he was acting for 'national defense' in taking from the college land which would be used to house naval enlisted personnel."

Chesterton's Biographer Recalls Life

The life of G. K. Chesterton, Englishman of letters and exponent of the Catholic faith, was reconstructed last night for more than 300 persons by his official bigrapher, Mrs. Maisie Ward Sheed, of London.

She addressed a meeting sponsored by the Washington Catholic Evidence Guild at the Washington Hotel.

Chesterton said "A paradox is truth standing on its head to draw attention to itself," and Mrs. Sheed pointed out that the truth about her subject was replete with many paradoxes. She cited these facts about him:

Backward in school, Chesterton "learned to read late, learned to write late, and never learned to spell."

"The last of all Chesterton's gifts to develop was his sense of humor."

When he was studying art and literature at London University, he drew in literature classes and took notes on literature in drawing classes.

"While Chesterton developed enormously, he never left behind him those qualities he had as a child," declared Mrs. Sheed. "He didn't lose anything. He grew and added, but he never lost anything."

She summed up his approach to the Catholic church as a "gradual growth," stating that "he progressed steadily on one line. Everybody could see that here was a man who didn't go to and fro, but progressed steadily. He changed somewhat in his approach to his principles, but never changed his principles."

Mrs. Sheed's husband, Frank Sheed, had been scheduled to speak, but was called back to London on business connected with the publishing firm with which he is associated.

Meetings of 18 citizens' associations, three association councils and the Federation of Citizens Associations, together with three civic banquets, make this week's civic schedule the most active thus far in the current season.

The Northwest and Southeast Councils are both slated to meet Tuesday night, the former at Columbia Country Club and the latter at No. 11 Police Precinct, Nichols Avenue and Chicago Street Southeast. The Northeast Conference meeting will be held Thursday and the Federation of Citizens Association's monthly conclave will be Saturday night in the District Building.

Banquets scheduled for this week include a testimonial dinner to Senator William H. King Tuesday at 7 p. m. in Columbia Country Club by Northwest citizens. The Hampshire Heights Citizens Association will hold its second annual banquet tonight at 7 in the Hamilton Hotel.

The Progressive Citizens of Georgetown will hear Miss Gertrude Sawyer, architect, speak on "How to Preserve Eighteenth Century Architecture in Modern Times" tonight. Members of the Dupont Circle unit have scheduled a talk on zoning problems by S. G. Lindholm, zoning commissioner of the District and member of the Zoning Adjustment Board, this afternoon.

On Wednesday, members of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia will elect officers and hear a report of their banquet committee at their regular monthly meeting in the Old Union Engine House, at Nineteenth and H Streets Northwest.

The Brookland association will meet Wednesday to discuss the proposed through bus service to its area and a new library, according to President Marvin M. McLean. Also meeting Wednesday is the Friendship organization, in the Janney School, at Wisconson Avenue and Albemarle Street Northwest.

Chillum Heights and Randle Highlands citizens will hold their meetings Friday night. Dr. Barnhart, New Church Aide, Says Christians Must Unite

Head of Hood College Religion Department, D. C. Federation Secretary Visits Here; He'll Assume Duties Full-Time in January

Christians must unite or perish these days, Dr. William H. Barnhart, new executive secretary of the head of the department Churches, declared here last night.

In his first interview since being elected to the federation position, the head of the department of religion at Hood College, Frederick, Md., said that "part of the great strength of Fascists is their unity."

Dr. Barnhart will bring to the new position wide experience with many denominations, both in teaching and personal background. Originally a member of the Evangelical Church, he later was ordained into the Congregational Church when he became teacher of religion and philosophy at Pacific College, Forest Grove, Oreg., near Portland. Then, upon coming to Hood, he returned to the Evangelical faith. His father, Dr. John L. Barnhart, has been pastor of Messiah Evangelical and Reformed Church in Baltimore for 30 years.

A native Pennsylvanian, Dr. Barnhart also was educated at Johns Hopkins and Columbia Universities. He and Mrs. Barnhart have two children—Eleanor Hoyle, 8, and Joanne, 6. He will address the dedication exercises for the new Taneytown (Md.) High School today, and expects to attend the biennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ at Atlantic City, December 10 to 13.

In his sermon at the annual Brotherhood Communion service at Concordia last night, he advised that joy could be found in life today by giving oneself to some great Christian causes.

Dr. Barnhart succeeds Dr. W. L. Darby, who retired Saturday after 18 years' Federation service.

Don't Lose Faith, Rabbi Segal Says at Banquet

Rabbi Henry Segal, of the B'nai Israel Congregation, last night urged 1,000 congregation members not to permit the world situation to drive them to pessimism and loss of faith in the future.

Speaking at the sixteenth annual banquet in the Willard ballroom, he declared that "many nations have arisen in the history of mankind to destroy what man holds dear, but they have always fallen eventually."

Other speakers included Mrs. Leo Garner, president of the congregation sisterhood; Paul Himmelfarb, president of the brotherhood, and Mrs. Harry Rubinstein, chairman of the banquet.

'Dirty Dozen' Run Afoul Law When They Commit 13th Theft

They called themselves the "Dirty Dozen," and while police have a notion the name was chiefly a creature of adolescent whim, with no particular significance, there can be no doubt it was fateful No. 13 that tripped them.

For eight or ten weeks they have been making life miserable for police and householders alike throughout Northeast Washington by thieving in nearly a score of residences.

They were jailed in the Ninth Precinct Station last night, and it was a watch stolen in their thirteenth "job" that led to the roundup of nine of them, boys 14 and 15 years old. According to Detective Sergt. Edgar E. Scott, they tried to sell the watch to a gas station attendant, who refused to buy, but who carefully noted their appearance and telephoned police.

From descriptions thus provided, Scott, Detective Sergt. L. M. Wilson and Detectives Irving Lubore and D. A. Higgins were able to arrest two of the boys. Arrest of the others followed questioning of the pair.

Among the loot recovered by detectives was another watch, a hand-made Swiss timepiece with chimes, inherited from his father by E. Joseph Aronoff, 647 E Street Northeast, an employe of the Federal Housing Administration. Aronoff said the watch was worth $1,500.

In addition, police estimated the gang stole $1,000 worth of jewels and trinkets, a part of which has been recovered.

Sergt. Scott said he believed the gang to be successors to the old "Thirteen Gang," which operated in the same territory several years ago and which also was unlucky in numbers.

Premarital Health Test Law Advised

Commissioners Get Special Committee Recommendation Based on Hearing

Medical tests showing freedom from syphilis, gonorrhea and tuberculosis in a communicable state were recommended yesterday as a prerequisite to obtaining a marriage license in the District by a special committee appointed by the Commissioners.

The committee was appointed to study the Health Department's bill which required pre-marital examination for syphilis only.

The enlargement of the program to include tests for gonnorhea and communicable tuberculosis came about as the result of the "unanimous opinion" of the District Medical Society that a test only for syphilis was "just a part of the picture," Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech, chairman of the special committee, said following yesterday's meeting at the District Building.

Several Places to Obtain Tests

Under the enlarged bill proposed by the committeee, tests can be made through the Public Health Office, the Army, the Navy and in clinics, as well as by private physicians, Keech said.

Emphasizing the importance of the clause stating that any of the diseases must not be in a communicable state at the time of a person's entrance into marriage, Keech said "that doesn't mean that an applicant who has had a disease is forever barred from obtaining a license in the District."

The committee concluded to strike from the proposed legislation the section which would invalidate common law marriages in the District. "A greater damage would be done to children, parents and the community as a whole" if the common law marriage should be revoked, it was declared.

Dr. Ruhland Pleased

Under common law marriage, a father must care for a child, the committee pointed out.

Dr. E. W. Copeland, a representative of the medical society, and Mrs. E. W. Payton, representing the Federation of Citizens Associations, were those attending yesterday's meeting. Sefton Darr and Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, the other two members of the committee, were absent, but were reported to be in "general accord" with the conclusions reached.

Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer for the District, who recommended the Wasserman test for syphilis, expressed pleasure last night on hearing of the committee's proposal.

"The important thing is to have some form of physical examination that will disclose whether or not it's advisable for a person to marry," he said.

With Shirley Povich

Rose Bowl fever seems to be ebbing. On New Year's Day, Pasadena will still have its tournament of roses, its pageantry and its crowd, but the chances are it won't have the best football game of the day. They'll be staging that one down in New Orleans where the Sugar Bowl will be host to two—not one—of the Nation's unbeaten teams.

POVICH

Once reserved for the Brahmins of college football, the Rose Bowl this year will be playing No. 2 fiddle (do you like your metaphors scrambled or shirred?) to the Sugar Bowl presentation. Down in New Orleans it will be Tennessee vs. Boston College and that affair will settle a lot more football arguments than anything the Rose Bowl can stir up at this late date.

At any rate, there'll be only one unbeaten team in the Rose Bowl—Stanford. Texas A. & M.'s last-game defeat by Texas knocked the props out from under what was shaping up as a Rose Bowl natural. Nebraska was a substitute, and scarcely improves the Rose Bowl scenery. We'll take Tennessee vs. Boston College for our game of the day, or did we say that before?

The Cornhuskers have been beaten only by Minnesota (that's no disgrace) but the fact is that Nebraska's greatest recommendation for a Rose Bowl invitation was that defeat by Minnesota. Otherwise, the Cornhuskers haven't licked much, beating Indiana by a mere touchdown, Pitt by two points and Iowa by eight.

The old order is really changing. This is a year when the Rose Bowl has actually been snubbed, spurned and scoffed at by a team that probably had a very good chance to get the invitation to play Stanford. We mean Boston College. When the Texas Aggies were finally knocked off a week ago, Boston College moved to the forefront of the prospective invitees to Pasadena.

Boston was the East's only major unbeaten and untied team. Minnesota was bound by Western Conference rules not to play a post-season game. There wasn't another unbeaten club save Tennessee that seemed to merit a Rose Bowl bid, and the Pasadena folks are reportedly soured on Southern teams who have been taking Rose Bowl beatings regularly. So B. C. had every right to expect a Rose Bowl bid on Saturday night after finishing its schedule with a victory over Holy Cross.

But did the Eagles stand about coyly waiting to be asked to the Rose Bowl? They did not. They apparently didn't think it was worth waiting for, because a few hours after licking Holy Cross, they announced that they had accepted a bid from the Sugar Bowl to meet Tennessee.

The fact is that in a financial way, the Sugar Bowl is more attractive to competing teams than the Rose Bowl. The Pasadena folks have cut down the percentages to the competing clubs which now limits them to a maximum of $70,000 each in contrast to the high figure of $120,000 that some colleges took away from the Rose Bowl. The Sugar Bowl, with its increased capacity, can come close to guaranteeing each team $80,000.

The Sugar Bowl year by year has been flourishing at the expense of the Rose Bowl. The New Orleans folks are serious about their New Year's Day game and have invariably come up with contending teams that yielded nothing to the Rose Bowl in prestige or talent. This seems to be the year when the Sugar Bowl will finally take the lead in the New Year's Day football parade.

We aren't sharing the belief that the Boston College club lost luster last week-end when it defeated Holy Cross only, 7-0. That was one of those intra-State battles that always whip up the under dog to a furious competitive pitch and somehow always seems to ennervate the favorite. Washington had a counterpart of that affair in its own back yard a week ago when Georgetown could beat George Washington only 8-0.

The pity is that in a year when the West Coast has come up with a glamorous sort of representative for the Rose Bowl it is fated to meet a team that can't contest for any national championship. Stanford's "rags to riches" eleven which didn't win a single conference game last year and didn't lose a game this year, is the most sensational team in the Nation and deserves better competition than the Big Six champs.

Stanford is the toast of the Coast, but New Orleans should worry. Tennessee and Boston College bulk as the makers of a better ball game than anything the Rose Bowl can produce. How do you spell eclipsed, because that's what has happened to the Rose Bowl, at least temporarily.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Dec. 1.—Here are some scrambled memories of a week-end of bearing witness to the Dodgers-Giants game, the Conn-Savold fight, the Army-Navy game, and the etc., etc.

It was Mel Hein day at the Polo Grounds, and a mighty touching occasion it was, but somebody neglected to tell Ace Parker, who gave his Dodgers their first win over the Giants in 10 years . . . Not content with his "day" last Sunday at Brooklyn, the incredible fellow had one that henpecked Mel's "day." Ace threw two great touchdown passes and made one of the most stirring interceptions we ever saw to check the Giants near the end. But old Mel had his own type of glory, the negative glory of a fine lineman. He played 58 minutes, was in nearly every tackle, and got an ovation when Steve Owen sentimentally took him out with two minutes to go.

CONSIDINE

As for the fight Friday night, Billy Conn did nothing that gained any additional members for the I-Want-to-See-Conn-Fight-Louis Club, now composed of Conn, his Manager Johnny Ray and Mike Jacobs, who may bolt the club at any moment. But that he isn't heavy enough, strong enough nor sluggy enough to beat Louis doesn't interfere with our enjoyment of the fellow. We think Wilyum is a pretty wonderful addition to the fight game. He is the best boxer alive, and the best looking guy in the ring game. He's a reincarnated old master, born in an age when only sock seems to count.

We think persons who go to see his fights should cease expecting him to engage in the slaughter business. He is an astute fencer, heir of a great ring heritage, champion of a reputable division. It is too bad that he, and thus in turn the public, can't be content with that.

Savold was a sort of pathetic figure in the locker room after the fight. The big guy who never could get untracked sat dejectedly on the edge of his dressing table. There were some reporters there, but nobody could think of anything to ask him. Then his manager, Pinkie George, came in and bawled him out, pitilessly, for not using his right until so late in the fight.

The Army-Navy game was better than almost anyone expected, although we didn't get around to taking a poll. Navy's two-touchdown edge was the largest margin it has beaten Army by since the first game of the series, 50 years ago. If Rip Miller can come through with another line next year, the Tars should have an excellent team. Its splendid backs are still sophs and juniors. Busik, Clark, Malcolm and Gebert turned in some great ball-running. It is too bad that the 1940 season's records of Army and Navy, especially Army, were so deplorable that the crowd at Philadelphia was held to 102,000.

We were on the air with Carl Snavely between the halves at Philadelphia, but didn't recognize him without his signaling cylinder. Carl got off a pretty good line on the broadcast. Bill Stern congratulated him on his sportsmanship in giving that game back to Dartmouth and Carl said thanks, but he'd still have the victory.

Bobby Feller was at the ringside at the Garden Friday night. He's a friend of Savold. Said he was in great shape. He has been hunting with Rollie Hemsley. He didn't want to talk much about Ossie Vitt, but he said that the reason he joined the anti-Vitts was that "I think a manager should believe in his players, particularly the players who need that kind of boosting. Vitt was okay to me. It was some of the other fellows I was thinking about. Anybody who says Ossie overworked me is crazy. I wanted to pitch that relief ball at the end of the season more than he wanted me to. I even think he didn't use me enough early in the year."

G. U. Eleven Starts Work Today

Georgetown University's football squad, idle since finishing its season with an 8-0 victory over George Washington November 23, will resume practice this afternoon at the Hilltop for a postseason game to be played with Santa Clara at Los Angeles.

Date of the game, a benefit for the British War Relief Fund, is still undecided. Georgetown has notified Santa Clara that any date would be acceptable to them and word is expected at any time from the West Coast school.

H. Gabriel Murphy, Georgetown director of athletics, said last night that the Georgetown squad would leave for the Coast about ten days before the game is scheduled.

Nebraska U. And Stanford In Rose Bowl

Official Acceptance Of Game Announced By Both Schools; Tough Battle Seen

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Dec. 1.—University of Nebraska, champion of the Big Six Conference, has been named as Stanford's opponent in the Pasadena Rose Bowl classic New Year's Day, Al Masters, Stanford director of athletics, announced tonight.

Negotiations were conducted between Masters and Maj. L. T. "Biff" Jones, Nebraska coach. Masters said the selection was "all set," indicating Big Six officials had lifted their ban on post-season games in this case.

Nebraska lost only one game during its 1940 campaign—a 13-7 defeat by Minnesota. Stanford, guided amazingly by its new coach, Clark Shaughnessy, after a disastrous showing last season, is unbeaten and untied.

Huskers First Choice

Stanford won the Pacific Coast Conference championship and clinched a bid to the Rose Bowl by beating its traditional rival, California, yesterday.

Nebraska, with an outstanding record since its opening game loss to Minnesota, evidently was Stanford's first choice since it won the Western nomination.

Masters, representing the three-man committee of Norman Standlee, first-string fullback of the team, and Prof. William B. Owens, of the faculty, had been trying to contact "Biff" Jones, coach and athletic director of the Cornhuskers, since early afternoon, it was learned.

Jones, meanwhile, was seeking approval for the game from Big Six faculty members.

It will be the first time Nebraska has been represented in the Rose Bowl.

Indians Pick Strong Foe

Masters voiced the opinion Stanford would meet one of the strongest teams in the country. He pointed to the Nebraska record of eight victories and one defeat.

After Nebraska lost to the Big Ten champion in the opening game of the season, it swept through its schedule in impressive fashion, barring the 9-7 win over Pittsburgh.

After Minnesota, the Cornhuskers won from the following opponents: Indiana, 13-7; Kansas, 53-2; Missouri, 20-7; Oklahoma, 13-0; Iowa, 14-6; Pittsburgh, 9-7; Iowa State, 21-12, and Kansas State, 20-0.

Selection of Nebraska not only assured the Pasadena New Year's day classic its first look at a repre-

Chicago Bears Score 31 Quick Points, Defeat Cardinals, 31-23

Clinch Western Division Title With Victory

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Dec. 1.—The Chicago Bears, a great team when the pressure was on, won the Western Division championship of the National Professional Football League today, defeating the Chicago Cardinals, 31 to 23, before 13,902 shivering fans at Wrigley Field.

The Bears, qualifying to meet the Washington Redskins, Eastern Division champions, in the league championship playoff next Sunday at Washington, won their final game of the regular season with a superb first-half offensive. This nullified a great fourth-period drive which accounted for all of the Cardinal points.

The victors "had it" today during the first two periods—when the outcome of the Green Bay-Cleveland game was in doubt. During those first two quarters the Bears scored all of their points. Later in the game, with Green Bay's playoff chances lost as the Packers tied the Rams at 13-all, the Bears coasted along until it seemed the Cardinals had a chance to pull the battle out of the fire.

The final Western Division standings gave the Bears eight wins and three defeats against six wins, four losses and one tie for Green Bay's second place club.

The victors scored 17 points in the opening period. Phil Martinovich booted a field goal from the Cardinal 30-yard line and, two minutes later, after the Bears took possession on a short Cardinal punt, Ray Nolting took a lateral from Sid Luckman for a 20-yard touchdown run. Near the close of the period, after a smashing ground and aerial drive, Luckman pitched a 20-yard pass to Dick Plasman for another touchdown.

Losers Score All Points in Final Period of Game

The next Bear score came within the opening minute of the second period, Ray McLean returning a punt 44 yards for a touchdown with a brilliant exhibition of shifty running. Late in the period the final Bear touchdown came as John Siegal intercepted a Cardinal pass at the Cardinal 30, then raced to the Bear 20. Surrounded by tacklers, he lateraled to Al Baisi, who in turn lateraled to Joe Maniaci. Maniaci had only to run five yards for the touchdown.

March Halted

With three minutes to go and a lead of only eight points, the Bears tightened like champions, stopping the Cardinal aerial game cold and apparently being under way for a touchdown of their own as the final gun sounded.

The Cardinals struck with lightning speed in the fourth stanza. Luckman, trying to pass, was caught behind the Bears' goal line for the safety which gave the losers their first two points. Then Buddy Parker climaxed a 69-yard Cardinal drive by ramming center for 2 yards and a touchdown. With Hugh McCullough passing brilliantly, the

O'Brien Sets Record; Dodgers Beat Giants

Little Davey Plays Greatest Game to Close Career as 25,838 Applaud

By Al Hailey

Before getting down to the subject of Davey O'Brien, it might be a good idea to mention that the Redskins won themselves the Eastern Division championship of the National Football League yesterday but in winning they were overshadowed by the inspired play of the lowest team in the league—the Philadelphia Eagles.

Two touchdown forays—the first climaxed by a 26-yard dash by Wilbur Moore in the second quarter and the second topped off by Dick Todd with a 5-yard cutback through the Eagles' middle—gave the Redskins a 13-6 victory, but the glory was all O'Brien's.

With the most amazing forward passing exhibition ever seen in Griffith Stadium, the 151-pound Philadelphia quarterback put the Redskins in the shade and stole the hearts of 25,838 fans who turned out to see the Skins win their ninth victory of the season to securely tie up the Eastern championship.

O'Brien, who only Thursday passed his team to its first victory in ten games this year, astounded the customers by playing 59 minutes 43 seconds and averaging a pass a minute.

The 5 foot 7 product of Texas Christian University, who today joins the Federal Bureau of Investigation, threw 60 passes, completing 33 of them for a new world's completion record in a single game—a mark which surpasses by ten the record broken by Washington's Sammy Baugh in Brooklyn against the Dodgers.

His passes piled up a total of 316 yards, which breaks the old record of ground gained through the air set by Pat Coffee with the Chicago Bears in 1937.

While O'Brien was the man of the hour and just about the entire Philadelphia offense, his former teammate at T. C. U., rookie End Don Looney had a starring role. Looney was on the receiving end of 14 O'Brien's passes for a total that surpasses the all-time pass-receiving record for a single game by 5.

It was O'Brien's final appearance on a football field as a professional player, and he celebrated the occasion by passing the Eagles to a fourth period touchdown and throwing more balls than anyone ever has thrown or thought of throwing in a single game in the history of the National League.

But despite O'Brien's great aerial circus, the Redskins managed to bring down to earth every scoring threat but for that 98-yard drive in the fourth quarter.

Todd Prevents Tie

In staving off the inspired goal rushes of the sadly undermanned Philadelphia club, the Redskins had to rise to their greatest defensive heights, for O'Brien's passes all over the field had the Washington linesmen and backers up in constant sweat.

It was Dick Todd who saved the Redskins from the ignominy of what might have been a tie.

The Eagles had pushed down to the Redskins' 24-yard line and there were but 43 seconds to play when O'Brien started one of his famous backward marches to get set for a pass. He eluded a tackler, spotted End Joe Wendlick running madly toward the goal line and tossed a perfect one just inside the end zone.

Great Ovation

Wendlick turned to make the catch, but Todd came in with an almost super-human leap to break it up. O'Brien's next effort was a short pass which Rookie Steve Andrako battled down followed by a fourth down pass which netted no yardage at all, and as the Redskins took the ball he left the game to the roar of probably the biggest ovation ever given a pro player at Griffith Stadium.

By their victory the Redskins finished a full game ahead of the Dodgers, whose 14-6 victory over the New York Giants yesterday would have placed them in a tie with the Skins for the Eastern championship had the Eagles come through with an upset.

Out in the Western Division the Chicago Bears rode triumphantly into supremacy by beating the Chicago Cardinals, 31-23, thereby making it the Redskins versus the Bears

Brooklyn Defeats New York, 14-6, to Gain Runner-up; Ace Parker Passing Star

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 1.—Ace Parker whipped touchdown passes of 28 and 44 yards to Banks McFadden and Dick Cassiano to drive the Brooklyn Dodgers to a 14-to-6 victory over the Giants before a crowd of 55,000 in the Polo Grounds today.

The Ace's two pay-off pegs, in the first and final periods, gave the Dodgers their fourth straight triumph and clinched runner-up honors in the Eastern Division of the National Professional League for Coach Jock Sutherland's pupils. It was their first win over their interboro rivals since 1930.

Both teams scored within the first eight minutes of the battle, and from there on it was a grim affair until Parker's second successful toss put the decision on ice midway of the fourth quarter. The Giants went 55 yards to score their touchdown, an 18-yard pass from Len Barnum to Jim Lee Howell going across after Tuffy Leemans had done some valiant running.

Hold "Mel Hein Day"

For Giant fans the game was no fit celebration of "Mel Hein Day." Before the kickoff they had presented their veteran center with a red automobile and a sackful of odds and ends. Parker, who got his auto a week ago, still was expressing his thanks to his Brooklyn followers.

The great Duke alumnus completed seven passes for a total of 122 yards, carried the ball for 34 more, kicked both extra points, got off one phenomenal punt of 58 yards to set up the first Dodger touchdown, and the rest of the time practically loafed.

With him to lead them, the Dodgers piled up a total of 340 yards to the favored Giants' 163. They were stopped short of another touchdown after a 67-yard drive to the Giants' 5, and when the final gun barked they had plowed to the Giants' 2.

The winners first score came after

Tom Harmon Says:

By Bob Considine

This is the first of a series of seven unique interviews in which Tommy Harmon, of Michigan, America's football sensation of 1940, tells Bob Considine, International News Service sports writer, behind-the-scenes anecdotes about his most exciting games of the season. During this series, the greatest college gridman since Red Grange will reveal the highlight of each game and in the final article will name his own All-Harmon team, composed of the toughest opponents he encountered during the season.

The greatest thrill Tommy Harmon got during the 1940 season came in the fourth period of the opening game of the year—against California on his twenty-first birthday, September 28.

He had opened his 1940 season in a manner that would have been rejected by any right-thinking movie producer if it were presented to him in script fashion. He had caught the opening kickoff on his 6-yard line and run 94 yards through the entire California team for the first touchdown. After that he had run 72 yards to score, then 86, then eight, and had thrown a forward pass for another touchdown.

"But, I dunno," the good-looking, modest kid from Gary, Ind., told me, "you don't think about those things, when they're happening. The real kick I got out of that game, and out of the season, was when Fritz Crisler took me out of the game in the final period. As I was trotting off the field the whole California stands

3,000 Watch Washington Brewers Beat Baltimore, 25-24

Floor Show, Music Mark Court Card

Riverside Scene Of First Basketball Game as D. C. Pros Open With Victory

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Chris Heurich, jr., introduced American League Pro Basketball to Riverside Stadium last night as the big plant housed its first court game before 3,000 fans with its new floor, glass backboards and the glamour of an orchestra, ball-room dancing between periods and Football stars galore.

The basketball game—that failed to match the entertainment as the boys were obviously in early-season form—found the newly-named Washington Brewers defeating the Baltimore Clippers, 25-24, for their first victory in two league starts.

The Brewers missed enough shots in the first 15-minute period to win a dozen games as they trailed, 9-4, but they caught the Clippers, 15 all at the end of the second period and Ben Goldfadden, a George Washington University alumnus, put through the winning points in the closing minutes of the third and final period.

Todd Opens Game

Dick Todd, who scored the second and what proved to be the winning touchdown for the Redskins a few hours earlier, tossed up the first ball to open the game. Between the first and second period Father John Law, of Georgetown University, presented a most-valuable player trophy to Halfback Jules Koshlap. Head Coach Jack Hagerty named Koshlap for the honor, and Heurich gave the trophy.

Leon Brusiloff's 12-piece orchestra played and Gene Archer introduced "Roll Along With the Brewers," theme song of the pro quintet.

St. Clair and Day, a ballroom team that leaves next Sunday to join Earl Carroll's new show in Hollywood, entertained between the second and third periods.

Referee Crowd-Pleaser

Back to the ball game—Baltimore threatened to make a runaway as it piled up a 9-4 lead at the first intermission. Referee Chuck Saladore was supplying most of the action with his crowd-pleasing antics as the Brewers couldn't find the basket.

Bob McDermott, high-scoring ace of the visitors, was taken out in the second period after he fouled for the fourth time—out of five allowed—and the Brewers took advantage of his absence to tie it up at 15-up.

At the end of five minutes of the last period, it was locked at 19-all before Ben Kramer, the former Long Island U. star and Goldfadden gave Washington the first lead it was able to hold with foul shots. Goldfadden dribbled in for a snowbird to make it 25-21. McDermott came back at this point and arched one from mid-court and Red Conaty dropped a foul for the Clippers to make it 25-24, with about 90 seconds to play.

Conaty Misses

The Brewers gained possession of the ball and with Whitey Wilson and Phil Rabin leading some fancy ball freezing, Baltimore couldn't get the ball and when they did with several seconds to go a desperate shot by Conaty was wild of its mark.

Mike Bloom, the towering former All-American from Temple, was scoreless for the Brewers as Rabin, who has led the league in scoring for the past three years, dropped seven points to tie Kramer. Player-coach Mack Posnack posted three successful foul shots.

McDermott's four floor goals led the visitors. If Washington lost the game it could have blamed inaccuracy from the foul line, as they missed 65 per cent.

Annapolis Welcomes Navy Eleven

Army Effigy Burned, Players Ring Victory Bell in Demonstration

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 1.—The victorious Navy football squad returned tonight with fanfare befitting the triumphant—riding up to the Naval Academy behind a truck on which an Army player was hung in effigy and followed by the entire regiment and the lung-straining Academy band.

The squad and regiment gathered at Bancroft Hall and there, after victory yells, the players in groups of four stepped up to Whang the ancient Japanese bell, tolled only when Navy conquers Army on the gridiron.

Each group clanged the bell 14 times, signifying the 14-0 trouncing given Army yesterday.

The two keepers of "Bill VIII," goat mascot, rang the bell, then Capt. Thomas King, athletic director, and Maj. Emery "Swede" Larson, Navy coach, had a turn at it.

Capt. Dick Foster, end on the varsity, stepping up to clang the bell, told the regiment the team had won for Victor Rowney, a player on the second team who was kicked in the mouth during practice last week and had to be hospitalized, missing the game.

Second to Lash was Greg Rice, of the South Bend Athletic Club, former Notre Dame runner, just as he was at Detroit. Third was Earl Mitchell, of Butler, and fourth, Tommy Deckard, of Bloomington, once a teammate of Lash at Indiana. Walter Mehl, of Madison, Wis., forced out of the national event by cramps, withdrew.

Redskin-Bear Play-Off Tickets On Sale Today

Tickets for the Redskin-Chicago Bears National Football League championship game Sunday at Griffith Stadium will go on sale at 9 o'clock this morning for the general public. Season ticket holders who wish to reserve their same seats for the playoff will be taken care of at the Redskin offices, 739 Ninth Street Northwest.

General Manager Jack Espey emphasized, however, that all other tickets, at $2.20, $3.30 and $4.40, will go on sale at the stadium box offices. A sell-out is expected by tomorrow from all indications. The Redskins' unimpressive victory yesterday over the Eagles, leaving them with nine victories against two defeats this season, puts them in the role of the underdog in the playoff.

in Griffith Stadium next week for the world's professional championship.

Skins Cautious

Playing cautiously to protect their one-touchdown championship winning lead, the Redskins were entirely outclassed in the final quarter and for 15 minutes were unable to get outside of their 40-yard line.

Just as the Eagles were unable to penetrate Redskin territory at all until late in the second quarter, the Redskins couldn't get to first base after Baugh climaxed third-quarter action with a record-smashing 85-yard quick kick from scrimmage—the longest in pro football history.

It was this kick traveling from the Redskin 13 to the Eagle 2-yard line, where Todd downed it, that set the Eagles' touchdown drive off—a drive that turned out to be the longest sustained march of the year in the National League.

O'Brien Intercepts

The Redskins had done all the scoring they seemed to want to do earlier in the game and were merely intent on stopping O'Brien.

Set back in the first quarter when O'Brien intercepted Baugh's pass to Malone on his 22-yard line and ran it down the field 50 yards only to lose the ball on a fumble as Dick Farman tackled him, the Redskins' second scoring gesture was halted at the Philadelphia 42 when Bob Masterson's fumble bounced right into the arms of Eagle Halfback Elmer Kolberg.

It was not until Todd took Kolberg's punt on his 38, returned it to the 45 and then ran it up to the 50 at the end of the first quarter that the Skins could get moving.

Moore Scores

With a new line in front, Rookie Backs Roy Zimmerman and Bob Seymour took over and quickly drove down to the 26, with Zimmerman smashing through the middle for the last 14 yards. The fifth play—a reverse from Zimmerman to Moore—brought the Redskins their first touchdown. Moore swept wide running hell bent for leather toward the left sideline, twisted out of the grasp of Jay Arnold and went across the goal line behind a screen of interferers.

Rookie Sandy Sandford's kick went wide and the Redskins were shakily out in front, 6 to 0.

The second Redskins score came after the Eagles had moved down to the Redskin 41 and George Somers' field goal attempt went wide. Starting from their 20 with four minutes of the second half gone, the Redskins called on Todd for a little duty and he obliged with a 3-yard starter and then a 17-yard sprint wide around his right end.

Near-Perfect Reverse

Todd then carried 6 more on a short reverse, lost a yard, but then picked up 5 of them on the next try. A pass, Baugh to Malone over the middle, gained 9 more yards, and then the Redskins worked a near-perfect reverse.

It was Baugh to Ed Justice, and Justice swept around his left side behind three Redskins interferers for 28 yards to the Eagle 8. Again the ball went to Todd, and Dodgin' Richard ploughed through the middle for 4. He was slammed hard on the next play for a 2-yard loss, but when the ball came to him again on a reverse from Baugh, he felt his way along behind the line until a hole gaped in the right side of the Eagle line. Masterson's placekick went squarely through the bars and into the laps of the Washington and Lee football team in temporary stands in front of the bleachers.

Eagles Begin March

That was the last Redskin move toward a score, but as the fourth quarter opened it appeared that they might have another very shortly. The Eagles were backed up to their goal on the 2-yard line as a result of Baugh's 85-yard kick but here's where things began to happen.

Twelve times O'Brien backpedalled out of the reach of Redskin tacklers and passed, and ten times he connected. The first two—to Looney and Franny Murray moved the ball only to the 10, but on the next play Lil' Davey decided to run when he was rushed and got through the mass to his 17.

His longest toss of the drive followed—a 38-yard heave to Looney, who was out in the clear streaking down the left sideline. Only the cagey running of Erny Pinckert saved the day at that time.

Pinckert Catches Up

Pinckert was the last man with a chance of catching the flying Looney, and when he overtook him from across the field he didn't try to make the tackle but ran past the Eagle end to turn him back inside. As Looney halted to cut back, three Redskin tacklers piled on him.

It proved to be a futile effort, however, for O'Brien kept right on passing over and around the Redskins until the Eagles were at the Indian 14. Thrown for a 5-yard loss by Red Morgan, O'Brien on the next play sent Frank Emmons right down into Morgan's territory and passed to him for the touchdown.

Emmons caught the pass on the Redskin 3 with Morgan literally hanging on his neck and squirmed away for the score. Franny Murray's placement kick was blocked by Andrako and Bo Russell.

While the game was unofficially a "Turk Edwards-Erny Pinckert Day" affair, the cheers were all for O'Brien yesterday. Pinckert and Edwards, who this year were playing their ninth season with the Redskins, were honored at a between-the halves ceremony in which Edward M. Curran, District attorney, presented them with silver service sets as a token of the appreciation of Washington fans. Both Pinckert and Edwards will be back with the Redskins next year, however.

'Skins Win Game, O'Brien the Glory As He Bids Farewell to Pro Football

Irish Mite Too Tired To Much Enjoy His Closing Triumph

By Jack Munhall

A mite of an Irish lad with an attractively homely face and large, floppy ears, he slumped wearily on a bench in the dressing room of the Philadelphia Eagles and only the bright twinkle of his eyes suggested that Davy O'Brien was supremely happy yesterday.

The first player of either team to leave the field, O'Brien dashed into the club house at Griffith Stadium amid a tremendous cheer for the almost 60 minutes of brilliant football he played in a losing cause against the Redskins.

Two reporters met him on the stairs to the dressing room and said "it was a great way to bow out, Davy," and he murmured thanks as he clomped on up to the top.

Quickly a crowd gathered outside and chanted "We Want O'Brien," and implored the overworked attendants to allow them just one look at the "little fellow."

O'Brien Center of Interest

Inside, a privileged few bustled around the mighty midget. News hawks, forgetting that across the hall jubilant Redskins were celebrating the victory that brought them the Eastern title, fired their questions at him. Photographers grabbed his aching right arm and posed him this way and that. For ten minutes the steam-flavored, arnica-tinctured air was filled with the bright flashes of speed graphics and the eerie whizzing of news reel cameras.

Davey O'Brien was paying the price of fame. Dead-tired—so exhausted it was an effort to strip off his sweaty uniform—the little fellow longed for the comfort of a warm shower. But, instead, he just sat there while his teammates pounded him on the back until he winced. A pug-nosed, inebriated gentleman staggered in, elbowed his way through the encircling throng and hugged "the greatish li'l Irishman I ever did shee."

Baugh Lauds O'Brien

Now O'Brien looked up and for the first time showed any real emotion as Sammy Baugh and other Redskins stopped by on the way to their own dressing room to say "Nice going kid and good luck to you." To each of them he smiled and thrust forward one of the deadliest hands that ever gripped a football.

Then, at last, he appeared regretful that he had played his last game of professional football, as Redskins' Coach Ray Flaherty appeared with a shiny, new football, the last one used in the game.

"Take it," he said; "you deserve it, kid."

And O'Brien, his eyes moistening, gingerly fingered the ball and, wrapping it in a towel, he placed it in his locker. Later he had it returned to the Redskins' dressing room, asking that all of the Washington players autograph it for him.

Finally when the crowd of well-wishers began to drift away, Davey, showered and looking much fresher and smiling happily, posed for more pictures, this time with Coach-Owner Bert Bell of the Eagles and Turk Edwards and Sammy Baugh, of the Redskins.

To Take Vacation

Then with Bell as an escort he ran the gantlet of the autograph-seeking fans, who had been waiting a full 45 minutes in the cold outside the clubhouse, and into a cab to catch the train back to Philadelphia. O'Brien, after cleaning up his affairs in Philadelphia, plans to vacation at his Texas home before taking up his new profession with the FBI.

Over in the Redskins' dressing room Coach Flaherty and Sammy Baugh were lavish in their praise of the stocky, 151-pound Irishman who had completed 33 of 60 passes for 316 yards and established new world's records for passes completed and passes thrown in a single game.

Flaherty, not meaning to detract from O'Brien's performance, said he was displeased with the Redskins' pass defense, explained that his halfbacks were too cautious in hanging back.

"But that's not hard to understand," he added, "for with a 6-0 point lead they were afraid Looney or one of those other Eagle pass receivers would get behind them for a touchdown heave.

Several of the Redskins, including Baugh, also thought that their

Orange Bowl May Invite Texas Aggies

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Dec. 1.—The Orange Bowl appeared on the verge today of discarding its North-South feation to Mississippi State's oppo-& M. here to play Mississippi State in the annual New Year's Day football game.

Shortly after the once-tied Mississippi State eleven was signed last night, Will M. Preston, Orange Boyl schedule chairman, disclosed for the first time that the Texas Aggies were being considered as an opponent.

Preston said Georgetown, Lafayette and Penn State were also on the list of prospects.

Aggies Want to Travel

The Cotton Bowl had announced previously that the Southwest conference would be polled to determine an opponent for Fordham in Dallas. Miami sources had it on good authority, however, that big John Kimbrough and his Texas Aggie mates considered playing in Dallas like "just going around the corner," and would prefer a trip to new territory. The Aggies played in the Sugar Bowl last January 1.

No definite decision on the invitation to Mississippi State's opponent was considered likely before late tomorrow or Tuesday.

Since its inauguration in 1933, the Orange Bowl has featured a Southern team against the best possible "Northern" opponent.

The Orange Bowl has been practically assured of a sellout of its 34,000 seats even before the teams were named.

Don Hutson Takes Pro Scoring Title

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Dec. 1.—Don Hutson, veteran Green Bay end, nosed out Johnny Drake, Cleveland fullback, for the individual scoring title of the National Professional Football League by scoring seven points today in the Packer - Ram game here.

HUTSON

Unofficial figures give Hutson, former Alabama star, 57 points on seven touchdowns and 15 added points. Drake, who prepped at Purdue, finished the season with nine touchdowns and two added points for 56.

Drake took a brief lead in the scoring race by tallying a touchdown in the first half today, but his placement kick for the added point was low. Hutson went over the goal line in the final period on an 11-yard pass from Harold Van Every and made a perfect kick for the point that gave him the scoring honors.

Hockey Eagles Practice Today For Boston

Two games ahead of the pack in the Eastern Amateur Hockey League, the Washington Eagles resume their home schedule tomorrow night as the Boston Olympics make their first appearance at Riverside Stadium.

Victorious in eight of their first ten starts, the Eagles are now strong favorites to win the Hershey Cup series, with the New York Rovers and the Baltimore Orioles their only challengers.

No fewer than five former college hockey captains, three from Dartmouth and two from Boston College, are on the Boston squad. Dan Sullivan, left wing; Paul Guibord, right wing, and Frank Sloan, center, are the Dartmouth alumni, and Gerry Derosiers, right wing, and Al Carvellie, center, are former Boston College leaders.

The Eagles and Olympics have met twice before this season, Washington opening its league season with successive triumphs at Boston Garden.

Nebraska to Meet Stanford

sentative from the Big Six Conference, but complicated matters for the sponsors of the annual East-West Shriner's Hospital Charity Day game in San Francisco, New Year's Day.

Texas Aggies Passed Up

For several years, Jones, former coach at Oklahoma and Louisiana State Universities, has aided in coaching the Western team in the San Francisco charity contest. He teamed up with Orin E. "Babe" Hollingbery in this coaching endeavor.

Stanford, in inviting the Midwestern eleven, passed up Texas A. and M. with an equally comparable record. After Stanford had been named the Coast Conference representative, there was considerable speculation whether it would reconsider the Texas Aggies as an opponent following their defeat, 0-7, by the University of Texas Thanksgiving Day. The Aggies, before their defeat, had run up a string of 19 successive wins and were considered first choice for the Rose Bowl.

Masters, after announcing the "Eastern" half of the January 1 game, prepared to leave for Pasadena to set up headquarters. He planned to fly from the San Francisco airport around noon tomorrow.

His office already has been swamped with ticket requests, he said, indicating the game would be a sell-out long before game time.

Nebraska Accepts Rose Bowl Game

Lincoln, Dec. 1 (AP).—Coach Lawrence M. Jones, of the University of Nebraska, said tonight he had accepted a bid from Stanford University to appear in the Rose Bowl game New Year's Day, subject to approval of Big Six Conference officials.

The Nebraska team plans to drill at Lincoln until the school's Christmas vacation starts, then will move West, probably to Arizona, where practice will proceed until two or three days before the game.

Nebraska officials here said, was tendered the invitation this afternoon and immediately contacted other conference schools asking permission to go. The vote to permit the Huskers to go was unanimous.

Charles Town Will Open East's Final Race Meeting Today

Limit Field Of Sprinters In Feature

Soldierette Meets Red Wrack, Others; Better Horses and Jockeys Available

By Walter Haight

Turf fans will head today for that panhandle of West Virginia, brought to a spear point by the junction of the Shenandoah and Potomac Rivers, where the Charles Town Jockey Club opens its 18-day version of the sport of kings. Edging into the bigtime with each succeeding meeting, Charles Town opens a session that is expected to surpass anything the sporty track has offered to date.

With the New Orleans track out of action and no racing east of the Rocky Mountains, Charles Town has been able to almost handpick its horses. More than 800 thoroughbreds, many winners in campaigns on the major tracks; between 60 and 70 jockeys, the majority of the bigtime variety; upwards of 200 trainers and several hundred owners have reported for the three weeks of action.

Taking the words of Russell Oakes, Charles Town's publicity director, never before in the ever-brightening history of the organization have prospects been as bright on an opening day. The grade of horses is higher than this track, and perhaps any track under a mile in circumference, ever has attracted.

Ten-Horse Feature

As has been the case for several years, ten horses will be allowed to start in today's handicap. It is the Front Royal Purse, at 6½ furlongs, for 3-year-olds and up, and a race that would be welcomed by Pimlico, Belmont Park or Hialeah. Horses of stake ability, many fresh from competing in $4,000 and $5,000 company, are in the line-up.

Mrs. F. W. Bond's Soldierette, Capt. Ewart Johnson's Royal Business, Hubert Kerr's Dizzy Dame, Mrs. H. Knieram's Red Wrack, Mrs. J. Y. Christmas' Shailleen, Mrs. D. A. Buckley, jr.'s, Here Goes, as well as O. S. Jennings' Blahblah, are among the eligibles. With 16 named overnight, a limit field seems assured.

Red Wrack, which has come a long way since last spring's Charles Town meeting, may be the favorite, although Royal Business, back in the Johnston Stable, will come in for a lot of betting ring action. Soldierette has met and defeated better horses than those he is asked to meet today and will not lack for backers. Here Goes, a stake competitor this year, is far down the list, but there will be many fans hoping he can get a crack at the sprint stars.

Track Good

The track was good last night with prospects of it being fast sometime this afternoon. A strong wind was aiding the tractors in grooming the oval.

Although no more than 58 horses possibly can participate in the seven-race opening-day program a total of 374 were entered on Saturday for the seven contests. In each race excepting the feature, starting fields will be limited to eight horses; as many as ten will be permitted to start in the headline offerings.

For the first race today, there were 66 throwouts; for the second, 94; for the third, 25; for the fourth, 40; for the sixth, 2, and for the seventh, 48. All of which is a convincing demonstration of the meeting's popularity, and of the attractiveness of the condition book prepared by Racing Secretary-Handicapper Fred Burton.

The course has been rounding into nice shape and soon should be at very tops. Hundreds of horses have been working over the course, and since none has been reported to have pulled up lame or sore, it is felt the strip is in splendid condition and conducive to good, safe racing.

Horses Shipped In

Several hundred horses were shipped in over the week-end, the majority of them coming from Bowie, Md. Throughout Saturday, Saturday night and last night, motor vans kept rolling in, and feed men were hard put to get all stalls bedded down for the new arrivals. However, the entire operation was accomplished in amazingly smooth fashion, and early today the stabling grounds and the racing secretary's office gave the appearance of having been in operation on an efficiency basis for years.

In the executive offices the picture was a bit different, with President-Manager A. J. Boyle, his executive assistant, Russell Oakes, and the Charles Town Jockey Club's secretary, Leeds K. Riely, up to their ears greeting visitors and supplying their needs or looking after their comfort.

In Charles Town, all available accommodations for visitors were occupied, and persons who had not made reservations were spread out over the countryside—to Berryville and Winchester, in Virginia; to Martinsburg, in West Virginia, and to Frederick and Hagerstown in Maryland—in search of quarters for the next three weeks.

On every hand, high satisfaction was expressed over the class of today's program, as well as over many improvements made in the plant since last July. It was freely predicted on every side that the meeting will be far and away the most successful in the history of the operating organization, and that the Charles Town Jockey Club, Inc., has taken another progressive step of prodigious length.

Clemson Tops Conference Standings

Four New Members Make Best Showing, Led by Indians

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Dec. 1.—The new members of the Southern Conference made their best football showing since they were admitted to the circuit four years ago by placing a quartet of teams in the first division of the 1940 loop standings.

Last week's flurry of games closed out the season in the four-State conference area except for the Citadel's homecoming engagement with South Carolina on Saturday.

Clemson's Tigers who divided the loop honors with Duke last season, romped off with the flag this time, leaving the Blue Devils in the runnerup spot.

William and Mary finished third and other newcomers who landed in the top flight were Forest, Richmond and Furman. The clash at Charleston Saturday will be for the league cellar as South Carolina and the Citadel have each dropped three family games and won none.

South Carolina gave Wake Forest a scare last Thursday before yielding 7-6. Davidson beat the Citadel 20-6 and Washington and Lee and Maryland tied 7-7 in loop tilts played yesterday.

Duke avenged last year's 14-13 defeat at Pitt by trouncing the Panthers 12-7 before 21,000 at Durham. The victory was the seventh of the season for the Dukes who lost to Tennessee and North Carolina.

The Southern Conference standings, final except for the South Carolina-Citadel on December 7.

Horses to Watch At Charles Town

Playmore—Dynamite Kerr's 8-year-old, is at tops and should pick up a purse in a distance affair.

Miss Maker—A hard-luck mare this year, and ready to win when not too ambitiously placed.. Likes the track.

Pink Carol—Daughter of Display with some good races in the book. She should earn her way here.

Remolee—Honest plater with a liking for the track. She has been rested and should go well.

Brighten Up—There is a race in the book that fits the needs of this one. String along.

Butterman—A shark over the local 4½-furlong course. Stay with this fresh one.

Magic Eye Calls Balls and Strikes; No Plate Umpire

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Dec. 1.—What's this? A "magic eye" ball and strike detector which would do away with baseball's plate umpire and his familiar bellow of "Yer out"?

That's a possibility for the annual National Semipro Tournament at Wichita, Kans., August 15-17, according to President Ray Dumont, who said today the annual meeting of the National Semipro Congress directors will be held here January 26-30.

Dumont said a miniature design of a device, which calls balls and strikes by means of electric rays, will be displayed at the meeting for the first time. The machine, Dumont said conceivably could revolutionize the umpire's part in baseball.

The congress directors also will decide whether the annual semipro world's championship, which has been staged at San Juan, P. R., the past two years, would be transferred to New York City in September, 1941. Plans for the 48 State tourneys also will be discussed.

Shepherdstown Cards 17 Games

Special Dispatch to The Post

Shepherdstown, W. Va., Dec. 1.—Preparing to enter his favorite field of endeavor, Coach Harry Lothes, former West Virginia University star, today announced a 17-game basketball schedule for Shepherdstown High's Cardinals.

Eight of the 17 will be played on foreign courts with nine at home. There are two open dates early on the cards.

The initial contest will be played at Cambridge, Md., December 13, while the final will occur at Charles Town vs. George Hill's Purple Panthers.

THE SCHEDULE:

O'Brien Wins Glory in Pro Game Farewell

pass defense was weak although all admitted that even at their best they would have had great difficulty in guarding against Davey's thread-needle shots.

"Great Little Player"

Baugh, who seemed to take a personal delight in the triumph of his fellow Texan who followed him as star passer for T. C. U., said he was not surprised at the performance with which O'Brien had amazed the fans.

"I knew Davey could do it," he said. "I have seen him do it before. He's a great little football player."

Someone then asked Baugh why that guy Looney (he caught 14 of O'Brien's passes) always seemed to be in the clear and Baugh answered by saying Looney was one of the best pass receivers he ever saw.

"It's almost impossible to cover Looney. He's very fast. He's a clever feinter and he has a great pair of hands. Our halfbacks knew what was going on but they couldn't prevent it. If they allowed Looney to get in front of them, he might have scored several touchdowns. So they were forced to try and run with him and when they did he would suddenly cutback and be in a position to catch the pass."

Flaherty said the Redskins were playing defensive football from the time they scored their first touchdown and that's one reason why they looked so sluggish." A team playing defensive football almost always looks bad," the Redskins coach said. "If we had been behind we would have cut loose and it might have been a different story. But we just wanted to win the game, whether by one touchdown or five."

Besides the Redskins and Eagles, a third football team saw action in the game. The Washington & Lee eleven, staying over here after Saturday's game with Maryland, enjoyed an unscheduled scrimmage as they fought for possession of the ball on Masterson's conversion following Todd's touchdown. Seated behind the east goal posts, the Generals had the ball kicked into their laps and they nearly ruined their bus driver who dove for the ball.

Ernie Pinckert and Turk Edwards were presented with silverware during the half-time intermission by District Attorney Edward M. Curran as the feature of their "day." The ceremony started on a hilarious note as master of ceremonies Frank (Buck) O'Neill was introduced as "Frank Buck." Also at the scene of the presentation in the center of the field were Representatives Hamilton Fish, of New York; Knute Hill, of Washington, home State of Edward, and Bertrand W. Gearhart, of California, home State of Pinckert.

Representative Fish, one-third of the "Martin, Barton and Fish" jingle, grinned broadly as the crowd met his introduction with catcalls.

Whether by design or accident the Redskins were party to an amusing skit. Holding only a 6-to-0 lead in the first half and not certain to win the game that would bring them the Eastern title, the Skins were in a huddle when the public address system announced, "at half, the Bears 31, the Cardinals 0." Promptly they called time out and someone yelled they needed it if they expected to beat the Bears for the world title.

Selections at Charles Town

Dear Al:

Charles Town bound today; Headed for the last round-up, as far as racing hereabouts is concerned, but it's like going home for Thanksgiving or the Christmas holidays for me. I like the Maryland milers, and the half-milers, too, but somehow Charles Town just gets me. Perhaps it's because I haven't missed a day since the track first opened. I remember the tractors, used to build the track, going out of one gap and the horses coming in the other for the first race ever run there. I can remember the rock pile at the turn into the backstretch when it really was a rock pile. I recall the day the cloudburst came and washed away part of the track. Then there was that 10-1 shot we bet. He was in front by 15 lengths entering the stretch, disappeared as if by magic, having slid under the inside rail and into the infield. There was the winner that did not have a single $2 bet on him and the day four horses went behind the rock pile in front and came out without riders. And at the first meeting, when one of the boys on the gates looked at my gold Maryland Racing Writers button and turned to his pa and said, "Look Pa, there's one of the Revenue men from Washington." There was the day, before the coming of the finish camera, that I beefed and beefed and beefed about Porphory being called the winner over Bright Spirits and I ended up with my beef. But Charles Town has come a long way in a few years. Brother Al Boyle has kept right in there knocking. He had confidence in the future of Charles Town. He took the rough edges off the track and eased it into the hearts of the fans. He accomplished it all so quietly, too. He has made the running surface one of the safest in the country. He put in the electric starting gate, the finish camera and the electric odds board. He raised purses voluntarily and he has done everything to improve the plant both for horsemen and customers. He removed the rock in the infield and turned it into gravel for the roads. In another year, he will have a steeplechase course surrounding a garden inside the main track. He removed "shed row," the eyesore on the backstretch and put a miniature park in its place. Brother Boyle has plans and more plans for Charles Town but, if he were able to wave a magic wand and see them all fulfilled, I don't believe he would be convinced that there wasn't something he could do to improve the place. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—Why War may be the right one in the day's opener. Flashed enough speed in Maryland racing to warrant backing at this abbreviated sprint route. Buddy Al has worked kindly and raced well in Ohio. He seems capable of handling that 119-pound assignment and will take it all if the top one stops. Clock Winder performed good at River Downs.

Second race—Westing, a fast breaker, and lightly weighted, should show plenty of speed in this event. Gets an outside post and I'm going to string along. Romney Royal probably is the one to beat but has been away a long time. Silver Beam bled last out. Barring mishaps, this one will be in the thick of contention.

Third race—Pep Talk appears the best placed in this sprint. Winner of more than $4,000 this year, the son of Infinite seems ready to turn back this company. Challante is in with a feather assignment and should like this track. Barograph can better that last at Bowie.

Fourth race—Our Teddy toyed with a similar field at Pimlico and looks like the right one in this distance affair. Needs only to make the turns. Pamunkey failed to collect a purse at Rockingham but is fit and ready. Two Aces is cheap but loves the track.

Fifth race—Cheer Me, with 102 pounds, gets the call in this event. After four straight seconds, the daughter of Solace should turn back this opposition. Navigation will be back on the home grounds and will be in the thick of contention. Wildmute had some excuses for that poor effort at Bowie.

Sixth race—Soldierette gets in action here with 105 pounds and has been chasing some of the best sprinters in Maryland. Packs a closing punch that may decide at six and a half furlongs. Red Wrack and Royal Business renew their old rivalry and I prefer them in the order listed.

Seventh race—Menen, a daughter of Flying Ebony, has good races to her credit in the Middle West. Likes the route and I'm going to string along. Dacotah has the speed but has been away from action since Timonium. Keswick Hill is at home on this track and is dangerous.

Best Bet—Our Teddy.

Bill Ackerman . . . Outdoors

In hunting upland game it is just impossible to tell of "good" places to go, for within a few days the covers would be barren of birds or rabbits. Yet we have had quite a number of calls for this type of information during the past few days.

ACKERMAN

For those who do not know where to go, or how to plan a trip to sections with which they are unfamiliar, we suggest—for Virginia—writing to the Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries, Travelers Building, Richmond, for the pamphlet prepared especially for this need.

Guides, many that furnish hunting equipment as well as dogs, are listed by counties. Included also, is a list of Virginia game wardens, who will gladly give pertinent information on the best places in their neighborhood. In fact many of them will accompany hunters. We know of many Washingtonians using this means, and getting the best shooting they ever had anywhere.

For those wanting to shoot in Maryland, the three southern Maryland Counties, Charles, St. Mary's and Calvert are just about tops for quail. During the tough years of 1935 to '38 they were producing when all others were at a low ebb and like conditions prevail right now.

Some hunters do not understand the dove season is split in Maryland. Needless to go into the why-for. It opened again on the fifteenth of November and continues until the thirty-first of December.

The same is true of Virginia. The latter part of their season opened November 20 and closed December 31.

The daily bag limit on doves, set by Federal regulation, is 12. Other bag limits in Virginia are eight a day for quail, three a day for grouse, and six for rabbits and the same for squirrels. On wild turkeys it is two a day except in counties closed to turkey shooting.

Virginia does have a two-day tourist hunting license, as so many have asked about. The days must be specified and it is good only on upland game. Everyone seems to want this five buck short license for waterfowl, for which it cannot be used.

Noted some weeks back—that war-time conditions having cut down the Canadian government's annual grant to the Jack Miner Sanctuary, the famous waterfowl refuge faces a financial crisis, which, in the opinion of Manley Miner, can be solved by contributions from sportsmen from the United States.

Equitable, too, that they should do their part, for most of the birds banded at the Kingsville, Ontario, sanctuary are killed in the States.

Jack Miner and his son, Manley, contribute their time to the management of the sanctuary without charge, in addition to the 400 acres of land on which it is located.

Tommy Harmon Says:

stood up and sang 'Happy Birthday To You.' Wasn't that nice of them?"

Michigan won that game, 41-0, and Tommy was launched on an incredible season which saw him break Red Grange's scoring record and emblazon his name in the annals of football. But, when you sit down and talk to him, as I did when he came to New York to make his debut as a radio announcer, he seems aloof or unmindful of the grandeur of his deeds. Tommy remembers the smaller things.

For instance, he speaks of that 94-yard run with the opening kickoff as "we took the opening kickoff on the 6 and went right down the field to score. And, boy, you should've seen Evashevski (Michigan's captain and Harmon's blocker) hit their end!"

Another Long Run

The 94-yard run was the only Michigan score through the first period. But in the second period Harmon took a long punt on his 28-yard line and ran 72 yards to score. It was an even greater run than his 94-yard one which opened the game. Because California's forwards had gotten down the field well under the towering punt and Harmon was forced to slant far off toward the sideline, and then cut back across the field, to shake them off. It was estimated that he ran at least 100 yards, to score from his 28-yard line.

By this time the 35,000 in Memorial Stadium at Berkeley realized that there was nothing that the Bears could do to stop him. Just 34,999 of them sat back to marvel at the 195-pound phantom on the field below them. But one spectator didn't. He was a commercial artist and a former gridman who had stopped at four too many bars on the way to the game. When Harmon got loose late in the second period and started off on his 86-yard touchdown run, shaking off one California tackler after another with feints and twists and sheer manpower, the drunk vaulted over the restraining wall and staggered out on the field, bent on doing his bit to stop Harmon.

The Twelfth Man

"I had finally gotten in the clear, thanks to a few breaks and some of the greatest blocking I ever saw," [illegible] explains, "and I was half-turning my head, looking back, when I sensed that somebody was near me. I should have seen him when he started on to the field, I guess, but a fellow doesn't look for things like that and I couldn't hear him, of course, on account of the noise. He darn near got me. They said in the papers later that he got a hold on one of my legs, but he didn't. I just did sidestep him when he lunged at me. I was pretty tired on that run. It was an awful hot day."

He still feels sorry for "that end" who was hit by Evashevski on the opening play of the game. "The poor guy came waltzing in there full of confidence, knowing he just about had me, when boffo! Evvy hit him from the side, and I don't think the fellow ever knew what struck him. He must have rattled for a week."

Harmon's four touchdowns that day gave him a college total of 21. Red Grange's Western Conference scoring record of 31 looked a long way off—especially with the bruising schedule Harmon and Michigan now faced.

(Tomorrow's article deals with Harmon's exploits in the Michigan State and Harvard games, and the great back tells of the shock he received at the hands of the elegant Harvards.)

Sugar Bowl Grid Selections Praised

Fans Agree Best Elevens Were Picked

B. C. Squad to Arrive At Bay Louis, Miss., Dec. 20 to Commence Training for Game

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Dec. 1.—Critical New Orleans football fans seemed agreed today that their Sugar Bowl had obtained the best possible game for New Year's Day by matching Boston College and Tennessee.

"They got the best team in the East and the best in the South—what more could you want?" was one fan's way of summing up.

"They're the only unbeaten, untied teams except Stanford, which has to play in the Rose Bowl, and Minnesota, which won't play in any bowl," said another.

During the season Texas A. and M., which beat Tulane in the bowl here last January 1, was the first choice of the sports writers and the public for a return engagement, with Tennessee second and Boston College third. After the Aggies' defeat by Texas the other two moved up into the first and second position.

"We promised the best game in the country and we have it," said President A. N. Goldberg of the New Orleans Mid-Winter Sports Association.

The Southeastern Conference seemed about to send another generous quota of members to bowl games. Shortly after Mississippi State licked Alabama 13-0 at Tuscaloosa, ending its schedule unbeaten and tied only by Auburn, it was anounced the Maroons had accepted an invitation to play in the Orange Bowl at Miami.

The opponent was not named.

Last season the conference's three cochampions all went to bowls—Tennessee to the Rose, Tulane to the Sugar and Georgia Tech to the Orange.

It was announced in Boston that the football squad of 43 players, with coaches and a corps of Boston newspapermen, would arrive December 20 at Bay St. Louis, Miss., about 65 miles east of here, to train at St. Stanislaus College for the Sugar Bowl tilt.

John P. Curley, graduate manager of athletics at Boston College, said a "gentlemen's agreement" with the Sugar Bowl had existed for some time, although nothing official had been done. After the Eagles' showing in trouncing Tulane here September 28 it had been generally believed they had only to finish their season unbeaten to receive an invitation to come back.

Announcement of the Sugar Bowl selection was made a half hour after word was received that Tennessee had bested Vanderbilt 20-0, finishing its third consecutive undefeated season. Earlier Boston College had had a narrow escape with Holy Cross but eked out a 7-0 victory.

What would have happened if one of those games had gone the other way was a moot question here. It was believed Nebraska would have been asked to fill in if either Boston College or Tennessee had lost. If both had lost, it would have been little short of calamitous.

R. Murphy, Guard, Chosen Captain Of '41 Army Eleven

West Point, N. Y., Dec. 1 (AP).—Ray Murphy, a guard who was kept inactive during most of the latter part of the season because of injuries, today was elected captain of Army's 1941 football team.

Murphy hails from Anaconda, Mont., weighs 190 pounds and stnads 6 feet 2. A junior, he will be 23 years old on December 11. He attended Montana State College in Bozeman for a year before entering the military academy.

Pirates to Begin Baseball Practice Earlier Than Ever

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Dec. 1.—The Pittsburgh Pirates will start spring training next year at the earliest date in history of the National League Baseball club.

President W. E. Benswanger and Manager Frankie Frisch decided today that the Bucs would depart for San Bernardino, Calif., on Feb. 21, with training getting under way three days later.

The entire playing personnel will start the trip as a single squad instead of being divided as in previous years when the battery men went to camp a week early.

Benswanger and Frisch will head a group of seven Pirate officials attending the convention of minor leagues at Atlanta, Ga., next week, where the Bucs hope to put through one or more player deals.

Policeman Stops Joe Louis—Champ Takes It Calmly

Boston, Dec. 1 (AP).—They've found the man who can stop Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis.

Police Sergeant Michael P. Carr turned the trick today. A red-haired Irish officer of about 40, who stands nearly 6 feet tall and weighs about 190 pounds, Carr simply walked into a North End gymnasium and had the champion leave the ring.

Carr's secret power? Just a Massachusetts law forbidding boxing exhibitions on Sunday. Louis is training here for a bout with Al McCoy December 16.

only three and one-half minutes of play. Parker's 58-yard quick-kick caught the Giants napping and rolled out on the 2. Barnum's return boot went only to the 26. On the second play Parker located McFadden in the end zone and wafted the ball into his arms.

Giants Gain Score

The Giants took the ensuing kickoff and, with the impetus of a 37-yard run-back by Barnum, marched to their score. Leemans and Barnum hacked out a first down on Brooklyn's 44, and then Leemans squirmed and fought his way 28 more to the Dodgers 16. On third down Barnum hung a pass on Howell's finger-tips in the end zone. When Barnum's kick went wide it was the first extra point the Giants had missed in two full seasons.

In the second period, Barnum fell short on a field goal attempt from the 43, and Ralph Kercheval missed one from the 47 for Brooklyn. In the third session Tuffy Leemans, almost unaided, carried the Giants from their own 35 down to Brooklyn's 27, but the Dodgers held him there and that was the Giants' last gesture.

The Dodgers then came a-roaring. With Parker passing to Rhoten Shetley for repeated gains and running for still more yardage, Brooklyn stacked up five straight first downs and reached the Giants' 5 before they were thrown back.

Barnum kicked out to the 44, and on the first play Parker sailed one far down the middle that Cassiano took in full stride almost between the goal posts.

With only about a minute to go Parker intercepted a desperate Giants aerial and raced it to the 17. Manders in two tries bulled his way right through the tired Giants to the 2, only to be stopped there by the gun.

Star Backs Sign For All-Star Game

Montgomery, Ala., Dec. 1 (AP).—Two ace backs, one from the North and the other from the South, were signed today by the Blue and Gray Association to compete in Montgomery's third college all-star gridiron game here December 28.

Acceptances were announced from Owen Goodnight, 200-pound Hardin-Simmons triple-threat, and Nick Basca, Villanova running and passing star.

Goodnight plays fullback and wingback on the Hardin-Simmons club and does most of the punting and passing for his team.

Rams, Packers Battle to 13-13 Deadlock

Green Bay Saves Tie By Scoring 10 Points In Final Quarter

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Dec. 1.—The underdog Cleveland Rams battled Green Bay to a 13-13 tie here today, missing victory as the determined Packers pushed over 10 points in the final period. End Don Hutson, one of the National League's top scorers, tallied points for the Wisconsin eleven and Clark Hinkle booted two field goals. Johnny Drake and Ollie Cordill counted Cleveland's two touchdowns before a crowd of 16,249.

The Packers went into the game with a mathematical chance to tie the Chicago Bears for the Western Division title, but the latter's victory over the Cardinals clinched the honors. The outcome left Cleveland in fourth place with four triumphs, six losses and one deadlock.

After Hinkle dropped back to the 45-yard line to boot his first field goal in the opening minutes of the game, the Rams took command and outplayed the Packers until the final period. Hinkle attempted a third goal from the 30 in the closing seconds, but the ball went wide.

Drake Plunges Over

Cleveland hammered at the Green Bay goal line during most of the first half, but it was not until a minute before intermission that Drake plunged over from the 5 to climax a 77-yard march. Parker Hall's dazzling passes gained most of the ground on the march, with Vic Soadaccini adding the point.

Hall's 30-yard toss to Jim Benton started Cleveland goalward early in the second half and the Ohioans capped a 71-yard advance with Hall's touchdown pass to Cordill. Drake's kick for the extra point, which later proved the deciding issue of the contest, was low.

Harold Van Every, former Minnesota star, was the key man in Green Bay's powerful comeback. His running and passing tore apart the previously effective Cleveland defense and finally Hutson grabbed one of his 11-yard passes for the Packers' touchdown.

Cordill Fumbles Kickoff

Cordill's fumble of a kickoff set up Hinkle's deadlocking field goal, the Packers recovering on the 24. Running plays carried the ball 15 yards, but the Rams broke through to throw Van Every on the 17. Then Hinkle stepped back to the 26 and booted the all-important three points.

Green Bay's marked superiority in the late period gave the visitors a 208-to-80 edge in rushing gains. In passing the Packers shaded the Rams 156 to 148 and were ahead in first downs 18 to 10.

One-Armed Golfer Nears Hagen's Course Record

By International News Service

Daytona Beach, Fla., Dec. 1.—One of the many records set by Walter Hagen, in the years when he was the king of a vast golfing domain, was in danger today of being shattered by a one-armed golfer.

Ralph Ebling, owner of the Daytona Beach Highlands Golf course, has mastered the golfing art despite loss of an arm, and is now shooting for Hagen's highlands course record. Yesterday, Ebling turned in an 18-hole crad of 69. Hagen's record is 67

New U. S. Industry

By Roger W. Babson

Aircraft and Obsolescence

PEOPLE TALK as if the armament program were only a flash in the pan. They ask, "What will happen when the war stops?" I believe that armament activities will go on for at least another generation after the war ends. A new industry is being born. Hitler has laid the foundation for the greatest industrial boom the United States and Canada have ever witnessed. We may expect to see employment reach its highest peak in decades. Not only will unemployed men who now want to work find jobs, but the "slack" in unemployment (normally amounting to a "float" of some 4,000,000) will be taken up.

No new industry was born between 1914 and 1919. A few airplanes were built, but they were of little consequence. The fact that France went into World War II with much the same equipment that she used in World War I proves my point. During World War I larger cannon and better machine guns were used and more ammunition consumed than in any previous war; but no basic changes in big guns, rifles, or munitions took place. Certainly, nothing occurred to make obsolete cities, factories, and even homes.

THERE IS A VAST difference between the world of 1940 as compared with the world of 1917. Hitler is brutal and is changing the map of Europe by a surgical process, but he is making a great contribution to the world in becoming the father of a new industrial revolution. Business has been looking for this during the past 10 years. The armament industry for which Hitler is responsible holds a greater promise for future growth than does any present enterprise. Cities in the interior will benefit greatly from this new industry, especially smaller communities of from 10,000 to 20,000 population.

Almost every implement, device, or machine which enters into the defense industry picture involves repeat orders. I think of this not so much from destruction, through which ammunition is consumed, guns and tanks blown up, or planes and ships destroyed, but rather from a quick obsolescence standpoint. Consider the changes that have taken place in fighting planes of all types, not from the end of World War I, to the beginning of World War II, but just since the current affair started.

WING-TIP and fuselage machine gun installations are only one improvement out of many. Read the newspapers and technical journals to visualize the improvements that are taking place in mechanical, electrical, and chemical devices which are fast rendering obsolete existing implements of war whether these be planes, guns, tanks, rifles, or munitions. This does not take into account new inventions which for the most part remain secret.

Unless one is close to manufacturing and its relationship with the defense program, it is difficult to appreciate the importance of constant improvements and replacements. The production of defense products automatically sets up an entirely new group of repeat businesses and the growth of the defense industry is bound to continue after World War II is over. Entirely new products will arise as its technological processes develop.

Let me recall the first test of what ultimately brought about our modern battleship. After the Monitor sunk the Merrimac on March 9, 1862, did the building of iron ships stop with the ending of the Civil War? No,—the little Monitor started a great new industry, the building of iron and later of steel ships for use in both war and peace. The construction of ships is still going on. Out of this industrial pregnancy of Hitler's new and more far-reaching industry, new forms of ship construction, city planning, and buildings of all kinds will develop.

YES, AS THE bombing plane has changed warfare it is drastically changing the layout of cities and the architecture of factories, shops and homes. New manufacturing plants are already being built without windows to avoid being located at night. They are also being divided into separate buildings so if one building is destroyed the other units can continue work. As cities have gradually been rebuilt to be more fireproof, so they now will be rebuilt to be bombproof. This will take many years. The defense industry does not mean soleley the manufacturing of implements of war, but should ultimately result in changes in roads, water pipes, gas mains, and power stations.

The construction of homes must radically be changed to provide the greatest protection. Civilian population, which in today's warfare suffers so much, must be cared for through individual and mass shelters. School houses must be redesigned as well as theaters and other buildings. Additional subways must be built to take not only street cars, buses and railroads underground, but to provide shelters for the public. There is no end to the amount of new construction work that Hitler has forced us into.

So many manufacturers were "burnt" in the last war and were left with unusable material and idle plants that they now are shy of war orders.

SUPERMAN — No Laughing Matter — BY JERRY SIEGEL AND JOE SHUSTER

THIS BUSINESS OF BEING AT ODDS WITH LOIS BECAUSE I MUST CONCEAL MY TRUE IDENTITY AS SUPERMAN IS MOST INCONVENIENT—ESPECIALLY SINCE I CARE A GREAT DEAL FOR HER COMPANY. BUT SECRET OR NO SECRET, HERE GOES!—
ER—MAY I HAVE A DATE WITH YOU TONIGHT, LOIS?

I FAIL TO SEE ANYTHING FOR YOU TO LAUGH AT, UNLESS YOU CONSIDER MY REQUEST FOR A DATE EXCRUCIATINGLY FUNNY.
I'M NOT LAUGHING AT YOU, CLARK. IT'S THIS LETTER—I'VE NEVER READ ANYTHING SO SILLY—OR PATHETIC—IN MY LIFE!
LETTER?? WHAT ABOUT IT?
YOU'LL HAVE TO READ IT YOURSELF—TO FULLY APPRECIATE IT!

JANE ARDEN — Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. — Maybe It's Amnesia — BY MONTE BARRETT AND RUSSELL ROSS

WHO CASHED THESE CHECKS?
WHAT MADE YOU THINK THEY WERE ALL RIGHT?
AFTER ALL, THEY'RE BOTH FOR PRETTY LARGE SUMS—
ROSE AIRY WAS HAVING DINNER HERE WITH FRIENDS—
ONE OF THE MEN IN THE PARTY CAME AND ASKED IF I'D CASH A CHECK FOR HER—
FOR $5,000? NOT EXACTLY CHICKEN FEED, WAS IT?
THAT ISN'T SUCH BIG MONEY FOR A MOVIE STAR—
I CATER TO MOVIE STARS WHEN THEY VISIT HERE—AFTER ALL, IF I CAN'T CASH THEIR CHECKS THEY'LL GO SOME PLACE THAT WILL—
THAT SETTLES IT—
AND SHE WAS RIGHT HERE WHEN IT WAS CASHED—
SHE WAS HERE—EXPERTS SAY IT WAS HER HAND WRITING—MAYBE SHE'S JUST FORGETFUL—OR HAS AMNESIA—OR SOMETHING—

with Glynn

(WJSV Announcer Lee Vickers today pinch-hits for Paul Glynn.)

Inasmuch as Redge Allen opened this series of "Pinch for Paul" articles with things he'll remember about radio, and inasmuch as Mister P., for whom the pinching is being done, returns eftsoons—I thought it not entirely amiss to recount a few of the things I shall forget about radio.

Take, fr instance, the time Gunnar Back, having recently joined the WJSV staff, stepped forth boldly, turned on an unsuspecting microphone, and announced bravely, "This is WJNO, West Palm Beach." And as if that weren't enough to lay you patient listeners in the well-worn aisle, Redge Allen, not once but four times during his first week at WJSV, announced with varying degrees of aplomb, "This is WJZ, Washington."

Not to be outdone in the face of such stiff competition, Joe King, about to introduce the famous waltz, "Play Gypsies, Dance Gypsies" from "Countess Maritza," breathed deeply and intoned, "Play Dancies, Gyp Dancies."

Me? Well, one night I was announcing an organ broadcast in Duke University's quadrangle theater. First there was a terrific crash backstage; then the organ, availing itself of the opportunity, developed a beautiful "cipher." Came the end of the program, whereupon my engineer leaned over and murmured, "X?!ZIX, what a smelly show!" PS.—the microphone was still open.

These are just a few of the things I shall forget about radio—I hope.

The Post Radio Time Table

12:15 p. m., WRC—Booth Tarkington's lively heroine, Alice Adams, is the latest to be serialized by that midday cereal opera, succeeding the "Wuthering Heights." Joan Tetzel plays the imaginative Alice, a role performed several weeks ago by Helen Hayes on her own program.

12:45, WOL—Mary Brian and Hugh O'Connell of "Off the Record" take time before the National opening to chat with Walter Compton.

3:15, WJSV—And here's another "Off the Record" player—Betty Furness, who talks of her film career with Elinor Lee.

8, WRC—James Melton and Francia White offer "Bess, You Is My Woman Now" from George Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" as their Telephone Hour duet.

8:30, WRC—Chalk up 12 years for the Voice of Firestone. Tenor Richard Crooks has spent the past eight as leading star and Alfred Wallenstein has directed the orchestra since April, 1937.

9, WJSV—Many of the leads in the season's football film, "Knute Rockne—All American" revive their roles for Cecil B. DeMille's Radio Theater. Pat O'Brien has the title role and other players include Ronald Reagan, Donald Crisp and Gale Page.

9:30, WOL—New Program: Can You Top This? is its title and Mutual proudly boasts it employs three comedians: "Senator" Ed. Ford, Joe Laurie, jr., and Harry Hershfield. Listeners send in jokes and the three "experts" pull gags on the same subject.

10:45, WOL—Marjorie Lawrence sings Brunhilde, with Rose Bampton as Sieglinde, Rene Maison as Siegmund in the Chicago Civic Opera production of "Die Walkure." Emanuel List, Elsa Zebronska and Fred Destal are other principals.
